No date has yet been fixed for the two-round legislative elections, but the president's sides have suggested that they might take place on June 14 and 21—just before millions of French families embark on their summer vacations.

The 491-member National Assembly is under firm control of the center-right parties, who hold a 75-seat edge over the left, including the Communists, Mr. Mitterrand's Socialists and their smaller allies. The president of the National Assembly, Jacques Chaban-Delmas, a Gaullist, met with Mr. Mitterrand in the morning and later told journalists that he was displeased at the president's decision to dissolve the legislature. Mr. Chaban-Delmas said there was no compelling reason for the action and that Mr. Mitterrand should have at least given the center-right legislative majority a chance to vote at this economic and political proposits even if they risked being

The Communist vote during the presidential elections was only 15.4 percent, the party's most dismal showing in 45 years. The same opinion poll released right after Mr. Mitterrand's election indicated that the Communist strength might decline even further in the legislative races.

Pro-Moscow Line

The Communists, who in recent years have vecred sharply away from a moderate course back to a dogmatic, pro-Moscow line, have changed their strategy once again in recent weeks. Mr. Mitterrand's impressive victory, with large backing from Communist voters, tacks on the Socialists and preach leftist unity. The party leadership has also muted its demands for Communist ministers in the new ing the last week and have agreed government to run single candidates in most

The Socialists have rejected a Communist suggestion that both parties agree before the elections on a single leftist candidate for each legislative district. Such a plan would tend to enable the Communists to hold on to many of their 86 seats in the National Assembly. Mr. Mitterrand would instead prefer to have both parties run entirely separate slates in the hopes that the Socialists will make gains in many Communist strong-holds.

Relations are still so cool between the two parties that Georges Marchais, the Communist leader, was not even invited to Mr. Mitter-

He also pleaded guilty to the attempted murder of seven women. Mr. Sutcliffe first killed on Oct. 30, 1975. His series of attacks on women, mainly in red light districts in northern towns, were quickly dubbed the Yorkshire Ripper killings and became a cause celebre in Britain.

Israeli Plane Shot Down by Syria Missiles

JERUSALEM -- An Israeli pilotless reconnaissance aircraft flying over Lebanon's Bekaa Valley was shot down Friday by Syrian surface-to-air missiles fired from within Syria just across the frontier, the Israeli Army command confirmed Syria asserted that two Israeli spy planes were downed, with the Damascus command saying: "We have collected the wreckage of both planes.

It was the second Israeli-confirmed downing of an Israeli drone aircraft over Lebanon since the Syrians deployed anti-aircraft missiles on both sides of the border following the April 28 shooting down of two Syrian helicopters by Israeli Air Force jets. Other hits have been claimed by Syria but denied by Israel Israeli military leaders have said that the Syrians were steadily strengthening the defenses of the missile batteries by moving in in-fantry, tanks and conventional anti-aircraft weapons.

Foreign Ministers Meet

Friday's incident occurred 24 hours after Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin demanded that Syria not only withdraw its missiles from Lebanon, but those newly deployed on the Syrian side of the border.

The party newspaper of Syrian resident Hafez al-Assad said that Mr. Begin's demands "constitute a declaration of war" without waiting for "diplomatic efforts to be exhausted." Arab foreign ministers, meanwhile, convened an emergency meeting in Tunis to discuss the Syrian-Israeli crisis. The governor's office in the Leb-anese port city of Sidon said that Israeli frogmen blew up and sank a Lebanese ship at daybreak. It said that the 8-year-old son of a Leba-

1 Killed, 12 Hurt in Riots After 4th IRA Inmate Dies

BELFAST - A fourth Irish nationalist hunger striker has died in Maze prison, and a rioter was killed and at least 12 persons, including five soldiers, were injured in the unrest that followed.

Meanwhile, Protestant and Roman Catholic hard-liners scored big gains in local government elecnons on Wednesday.

Patrick O'Hara, 24, died late Thursday night at the prison out-side Belfast, 21 hours after the death of Raymond McCreesh. Both were in the 61st day of their fasts. Mr. O'Hara was a member of the Irish National Liberation Army, a radical faction allied with the Irish Republican Army.

The deaths provoked shooting, gasoline bombings, rioting and burning that continued until the early hours Friday in Roman Catholic areas of Belfast, Londonderry, Dungannon and Newry, Police arrested about 25 persons. With almost all the votes counted, the Democratic Unionist Party of the militant Protestant politician the Rev. Ian Paisley had won 139 of 526 seats on 26 local councils — twice the number it won in the last poll, in 1977.

The newly formed Irish Inde-pendence Party, closely linked with the IRA, had 19 seats, and other nationalists took five. Oliver Hughes, whose brother Francis died last week in the Maze hunger strike, was elected in Magherafelt, porthwest of Belfast.

Gerry Fitt, a former leader of the mainly Catholic Social Demo-cratic and Labor Party and member of Parliament, lost the Belfast council seat he had held for 25 years. He was opposed to the Maze hunger strike and did not campaign, fearing assassination.

Seeking to ease Mr. Schmidt's concern about the surge in interest rates, which has weakened West European currencies, Mr. Resean expressed Thursday what an aide termed his "keen appreciation" of the economic predicament of West Germany and other allies.

"He didn't give a specific time frame," said a senior administration official, referring to Mr. Reagan's assurance on the rates. "I think the president is looking for the earliest possible time frame."

In a joint statement issued at the end of an houriong meeting Friday, the two leaders agreed "on the need in framing their economic policies to give high priority to the fight against inflation and to the creation of improved conditions for renewed economic growth." The statement also noted that "a serious international situation has been created by Soviet expansionism and armaments efforts. To meet this challenge and to secure peace," it said, the two "are determined to respond with firmness and to maintain a dialogue with the Soviet Union."

In remarks Friday at the Na-tional Press Club, Mr. Schmidt outlined an approach to dealing with the Soviet Union that is similar to U.S. policy, except that it appears to put greater weight on the need for talks with Moscow. He said that the West must si-

Coup Leader Tejero Becoming a Folk Hero for Spanish Right

By James M. Markham

EL FERROL DEL CAUDILLO, Spain - With its flags snapping in the Atlantic breeze and its men saluting on deck, the Spanish Navy corvette glided past the squat fortress of La Palma, rendering homage to the most celebrated prisoner in

On the raised bulwark of the granite fortress, which guards the narrow entry to the magnificent harbor of El Ferrol. Lt. Col. Antonio Tejero Molina saluted back. Then the Civil Guard officer, who led a band of Civil Guards into the Certes (parliament) in an attempted coup on Feb. 23, returned to his damp rooms below.

Col. Tejero is becoming a folk hero of the Spanish ultraright, and nowhere more so than in this military town, the head-quarters of the navy and the birthplace of Franco, who lent one of his titles to its name. This mouth, after hundreds of admirers had visited Col. Tejero in a military

All that the transfer has accomplished has been to lengthen the trip for the neo-Fascist faithful who consider the flamboy-ant colonel a would-have-been savior of Spain, or as some graffiti have it, the next caudillo. spokesman denied this. In fact, according to one nonadrairer who has visited him, Col. Tejero appears to be subject to moments of deep depression and even a flicker of doubt about his involvement in the plot. His rooms are cold and warmed only by butane heaters.

The ultraright's exaltation of Col. Tejero, a simple man with a florid and authoritarian sense of patriotism, is gradually converting him into the buffoon of

The colonel wrote a long self-justifying tract, which was published this month by the monarchist daily ABC. It is lyrical in

OECD Trade Union Grouping Forecasts 30 Million Jobless in West by Next Year

By Axel Krause nal Herald Tribune

PARIS - In a renewed attack on restrictive economic policies of Western governments, a trade union committee representing workers in 24 nations said Friday that the combined number of the jobless in the United States, Western Europe and Japan will reach a record 30 million by early 1982.

That projected level, announced during a news conference by the Trade Union Advisory Committee (TUAC) of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, is the highest yet cited by any international agency.

The OECD, in its most recent economic outlook report published last December, forecast that unem-ployment in the OECD area would rise from 23 million to 25.5 million during the first half of next year. But it also predicted a recovery during the year.

In a 12-page statement released to newsmen, the TUAC also said that Western governments were "apparently giving up all hope for any real recovery" in their econo-mies as they approach next month's OECD ministerial meeting in Paris and the seven-nation summit conference scheduled for Ottawa in July.

WASHINGTON (LAT) - The Senate has confirmed John B. Crowell Jr., a lumber company lawyer, as assistant secretary of agriculture to oversee U.S. forests, thus rejecting charges that he was involved in a timber anti-trust violation in Alaska's Tongass Nation-

The vote of 72-25 in favor of Mr. Crowell was taken after almost six weeks of controversy over whether he was implicated in the violation while he was general counsel to Louisiana-Pacific Corp., the largest buyer of federal timber. Mr. Crowell repeatedly denied any involvement in the anti-trust violations of Ketchikan Pulp Co., a subsidiary of Louisiana-Pacific.

U.S., Japan Drop Exercises As Nuclear Dispute Grows

TOKYO — U.S. and Japanese warships involved in joint maneuvers headed back to base Friday night after Tokyo cut short the exercises following protests from commercial fishermen in the area about damage to their equip-

Japan's Defense Agency asked U.S. authorities to suspend the maneuvers, involving 10 Japanese and 12 U.S. ships and originally scheduled to run through Saturday, after fishermen aboard five salmon-fishing vessels complained that their nets had been cut by naval vessels passing through the area in the first stage of the antisubmarine maneuvers a week ago. Damage was estimated at $400,000.

The move coincided with the acknowledgement by former senior U.S. government officials Thursday that during a period before 1961, the U.S. Navy permanently stationed a ship carrying nuclear weapons 100 to 200 yards off the Japanese coast.

The disclosure of that practice - a violation of the mutual security treaty governing U.S. deployment of nuclear weapons in Japan —comes in the midst of a political crisis in Japan caused by the recent revelation that U.S. warships routinely carried nuclear weapons into Japanese ports for 20 years.

came from two former officials after key portions of the memo were read to them on the telephone by a Post reporter. The officials, who played major roles in the episode in 1961, are Paul H. Nitze, who was assistant secretary of defense for international security affairs, and U. Alexis Johnson, who was deputy undersecretary of state for political affairs. Mr. Johnson said that in 1961 atomic bombs were stored aboard an LST landing craft at the U.S. Marine Corps air station at Iwakuni, in western Japan. Iwakuni is located less than 25 miles from Hiroshima, site of the world's first atomic bomb attack. Japan's Communist Party has long contended that atomic weapons were stored at the Marine base

Removal of Bombs

Mr. Johnson said that when then-U.S. Ambassador Edwin O. Reischauer learned of the bombs' existence, he asked the Navy to remove them.

"He felt this was unwise practice," Mr. Johnson said. "I agreed with him; Paul Nitze over at Defense agreed and they were removed and that was that." Mr. Johnson said the Japanese government was not aware of the episode. Mr. Nitze said the weapons were taken to Okinawa, then still under control of U.S. occupation forces.

UNITED NATIONS. N.Y. — The United States has launched a global campaign to punish Vietnam for its invasion of Cambodia by cutting off development assistance from international institutions and curtailing some humanitarian aid. The immediate object, according to U.S., West European and Asian officials, is to pressure Hanoi to open negotiations on Cambodia in an international conference under UN auspices in July.

Earlier this month, Washington rejected a permit sought by the Mennonite Church to send 250 tons of wheat flour to Vietnam — the first such rejection of food exports to Hanoi since 1975, according to officials of a humanitarian agency that deals with aid to

Resources Diverted

Officials at the United Nations and in Washington said the Reagan administration position is that, as long as the Vietnamese divert their resources to the occupation of Cambodia, "we question granting any assistance to them."

U.S. representatives will be authorized to state publicly at UN meetings that aid to Vietnam amounts to subsidizing aggression" that has been condemned by UN General Assembly resolutions, U.S. officials confirmed.

Asian diplomats opposed to the Vietnamese oc pation of Cambodia generally supported the U.S. idea of checking international aid to Hanoi, but were reluctant to make the case so bluntly. They would rather argue that UN funds are going "into a bottomless hole" in Vietnam, with inadequate monitoring, and that funding of development projects should be

The gathering will be asked to approve aid to Viet-nam that would provide $94 million to $118 million between 1982 and 1986. The agency now has a port-folio of $49 million in projects in Vietnam.

Bradford Morse, a former Republican congres man from Massachusetts who has run the agency for six years, admitted that the issue of funding for Vietnam could be raised at the June meeting, but said, "I hadn't heard of it." It has been brought up by previous U.S. administrations — most recently in 1976, Mr. Morse noted — and the Vietnam funding "has always been approved."

Mr. Reagan has proposed a 10percent cut in tax rates for each of three years, with a 5-percent cut to take effect July 1, two more 10percent cuts at the beginning of 1982 and 1983, and a final 5-percent cut in 1984.

Wednesday, Mr. Regan hinted to Southerners that the administration might be willing to postpone the current year's cut to Oct. 1 to help-hold down the fiscal 1982 budget deficit; he said the administration might consider Demo-crats proposals as well.

However, the Treasury secretary stressed Thursday in a telephone interview that the administration was still in the process of exploring other alternatives and is "not on the verge of making a compro-

Sources close to Rep. Rosten-kowski indicated the chairman still has not abandoned his insistence that the tax cut be confined to one year. However, most observers expect any compromise to involve a two- or three-year cut.

Mr. Regan and the Illinois representative also discussed the possibility of considering other tax-cut proposals that are being pushed by individual House and Senate Democrats, sources said. However, Mr. Regan still wants to defer these to a second bill later this year.

It also proposed a limit on exports of American technology, such as that being used in South Africa's search for oil. The country is rich in many

The commission also advocated that the United States increase its aid to other countries in southern Africa as a means of enabling them to reduce their dependence on South Africa. The United States should increase its stockpiles of chrome and other strategic metals and so reduce its dependence on South African minerals, the report added. No deadline was fixed for the South African government to show real progress in racial relations, but the report made it clear that U.S. government and business should move quickly to support black leaders in South Africa, and that aid to surrounding black countries should be made available as soon as possible. The commission urged President Reagan to issue a statement defining U.S. interests in South Africa and the entire region, and to de-scribe in broad terms the administraton's policy toward the region.

It called for formation of a high-level interdepartmental committee to coordinate policy.

Mr. Schweiker conceded that "the hardest edge" of the Reagan Social Security package was the proposal to cut benefits for those who choose to retire early, beginning in January, 1982. Teamsters delegates will convene June 1 in Las Vegas to vote on Mr. Williams' candidacy for a full five-year term as president of the 2-million-member union. Mr. Williams has no serious opposition to succeed the late Frank E. Fitzsimmon. The union hierarchy chose him as interim president after Mr Fitzsimmons died May 6.

Justice Department officials in-sisted that they made no attempt to push the grand jury for a deci-sion before the union election.

In the Senate on Thursday, the Permanent Investigations subcommittee issued an interim report describing Mr. Williams as a "mole" groomed by organized crime bosses to take over the union and run it for their benefit.

Democratic Sen. Sam Nunn of Georgia, chairman of the subcommittee during most of its investigation in the case and now its ranking minority member, said the panel hastened to release the report on Mr. Williams because "the rank and file have a right to a summary of our investigation" before the election.

The committee plans a more extensive report on its three-year investigation of the Teamsters pension fund within a few weeks, Sen. Numn said.

The committee urged the Labor Department to force Mr. Williams out of office if he refuses to answer questions about his alleged ties to Senate Votes to Put Tighter Restriction On Federal Funding of Abortions in U.S.

By Francis X. Clines New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - The Senate has voted final adoption of more stringent restrictions on U.S. funds for abortions. The restrictions, which will be in effect until October at least, would strike down two existing categories for funds - cases of rape and incest — and permit indigent women U.S. funds solely in cases where the life of the prospective mother is considered at stake.

The tightening of the abortion funding, which had been approved previously in the House, was led by Sen. Jesse Helms, Republican of North Carolina, over the objec-tions of his party's fiscal leaders that a full-scale debate of the issue is to be held later in the year and that it should not be treated now as a postscript to the major budgeting process.

The action was a further indication of the conservative tone in the Senate and the House. In previous years, when the Democrats controlled the Senate, such measures were struck down in committee. The Republican majority leader-ship tried the same tactic this time, but Sen. Helms, warning that the

Reagan's Guerrilla Tactics

We are not suggesting any particular politi-cal affinity of the Reagan administration for the various guerrilla outfits that are fighting from the shadows around the world. But it appears to us that the administration has adopted guerrilla tactics - rather successfully — in some of its main policy approaches in Washington. The tactic we have principally in mind is that of fading back into the populace or countryside (whichever is nearer to hand) when the going gets untenable or even just a bit too rough. One minute you have a socko warfare - assault. The next, if the thing has gone badly, you have ... what? Well, it's hard to say, since the combatants have just blended back into the landscape. The combat is gone.

AWACS provided the first example. When the administration's announced intention of providing these super-detection machines to the Saudis ran into heavy fire, including fire from some of its own friends and party members, and when it became plain that the political cost was going to be extremely high and the benefits at least open to question, it was announced that Congress had been invited into the process of finally deciding on the if and what of the AWACS deal. That could mean prolonged delay or even disappearance. But it surely seems to mean that no decision will be reached except with some pronounced degree of consensus within the Reagan constituency.

Something roughly comparable seems to have occurred in connection with the Social Security program. The prospective changes were made public last week. The uproar was immediate and huge. The disaffected included many of those the administration counts among its friends and valuable allies on the Hill and in the country at large. The perception of an evident miscalculation was followed at once by another of those guerrillatype vanishings: It has now been said that the proposals were only ideas that were being set forth and that they are all negotiable and so what is the big deal?

What interests us is the speed and smoothness and lack of dug-in commitment with which it was clearly willing to move off these particular positions that turned out to have been ill-considered or ill-prepared. It is inter-: esting that in both cases the administration did so by reaching out to involve (implicate?) Congress in its reconsideration of policy. Nothing dumb or amiss about that. Other administrations would have done well to know how and when to back off in this fashion. It's called regrouping.

THE WASHINGTON POST.

The Company Casey Keeps

A certain skepticism is in order when the intelligence brotherhood complains that amateurs are taking over the Central Intelligence Agency. The Bay of Pigs wasn't exactly an amateur production, save in its humiliating outcome. Nor were the abortive attempts to assassinate Fidel Castro in the 1960s. But in the matter of Max Hugel, a New Hampshire businessman now turned spymaster, the consternation among old CIA hands is surely understandable.

Mr. Hugel's most visible qualification is his longtime friendship with the CIA's director, William Casey. According to his official biography, Mr. Hugel served as a junior Army intelligence officer during World War II. He has had three months' experience as a middle-echelon administrator at the agency's Langley headquarters, a.k.a. the Company. With only this background, he has now been promoted to head the agency's directorate of operations, which controls covert actions and clandestine intelligence overseas.

Plainly, Mr. Casey wants a loyal associate in this peculiarly sensitive post, which has been described as the most difficult and dangerous in the government after that of the president. And Mr. Hugel earned that conficompany executive to help win the crucial New Hampshire primary victory just as Mr. Casey assumed command of the Reagan campaign. Mr. Hugel's political skills impressed old hands in that state, though they otherwise know little about him.

Still, winning votes in New Hampshire is one thing. Knowing the national security byways of Washington is quite another. And presiding over spy networks requires even more sophisticated knowledge and experience. Mr. Hugel's appointment is not subject to Senate confirmation, unlike the positions of CIA director and deputy director. So as a matter of law, Mr. Casey has every right to appoint a chum as spymaster. As a matter of policy, the appointment is questionable.

The CIA is unlike any other agency in the degree of trust it demands from Congress and the public. That trust was grievously abused in a period not long ended. Who can be surprised if there are fears of a replay in an administration that talks loosely about "unleashing" the CIA? These fears are fanned when an outsider with tenuous credentials is given command of the Company's most freewheeling division.

For security reasons, the Senate Intelligence subcommittee has been reluctant to delve too deeply into the agency's secret operations. But the command structure is a different matter. Mr. Casey - even the President --- have an obligation to explain what prompted the Hugel appointment, and to spell out the constraints on covert operations. That much light won't compromise the agency and would allay justifiable fears. In a double sense, the Company that Mr. Casey keeps is the public's business.

THE NEW YORK TIMES.

The $10-Billion Question

The Senate has by unanimous vote made clear its unfavorable opinion of the administration's proposed Social Security reductions. In response to that, the Reagan administration has said its entire list of proposals is negotiable. The Senate felt that the cuts are too big and fall too heavily on those about to retire. That's our view too, but it doesn't mean that everyone can heave a sigh of relief and turn his or her attention elsewhere. Social Security faces a real - although not catastrophic - financial crisis over the next few years, and something needs to be done about it before the heat of next year's elections makes sensible compromise difficult.

Where might one begin? Perhaps with a frank recognition that the idea of putting Social Security on a solid footing for all time (or its functional equivalent, 75 years) is not a realistic one. Most people have little enough faith in anyone's forecast for next year to be highly skeptical of prognostications reaching into the last half of the next century. Changes made now should, indeed, be consistent with some view of where the system ought to be in the long run, but it seems wisest to reconcile ourselves to the fact that periodic course corrections are both necessary and desirable.

The next step is to reach agreement on what size adjustment is really needed to get by the near-term financial squeeze. The administration judged, according to its worstcase economic forecast, that additional reserves of more than $100 billion would be needed over the next five years. That forecast, however, was a mighty dire one, with unemployment taking a sharp immediate jump and staying in the 8-10 percent range for almost the entire period and inflation heading up and lingering there. If things really got that bad, we'd guess more than Social Security would require repair. By contrast, in the best of all possible worlds — the world of the administration's expected forecast - the system could squeak by with no changes except the authority to borrow among the retirement, disability and Medicare trust funds. If we split the difference for starters, we might guess that about $50 billion in higher taxes or lower benefits are needed — or about $10 billion a year.

Our preference for covering that contingency would be an infusion of general revenues. Raising payroll taxes is not a good idea for a host of economic and equity reasons. If a general revenue contribution is not in the political cards, the only other choice is to cut benefits for all or some recipients. The best way to do this would be through some adjustment of the cost-of-living increase. Overcompensating for inflation over the last several years is the source of most of the system's current difficulties; taking back that over-correction seems the fairest way to put it back in shape. The Senate has already gone on record in favor of such an adjustment in its version of the budget resolution. If the administration can't stand the heat for such a move, it can shift the blame to Congress or perhaps to the hapless bureaucrats who made the over-indexing mistake back in 1972.

How to save $10 billion a year? Social Security is a gigantic system now paying out $140 billion a year, and the figure has been rising steadily at 10-15 percent a year. Modest changes in the benefit formulas can produce the necessary savings without severe injury to any of the beneficiaries, present or future, and without threat to the essential commitment that Social Security represents. GENEVA — The recent publication of Amnesty International's report "Iraq, Evidence of Torture" is one more reminder how far the international community remains from getting a hold on this disease of torture which seems to have swept the world like a plague during the 20th century.

According to Amnesty, during the 12 years of rule of the Ba'ath Party, allegations of torture in Iraq have become a regular occurrence. Although the government denies its use, little effort is made to hide it. The bodies of political detainees have been returned to families bearing marks of torture. Badly mutilated bodies have also been dumped in the street outside the victims' homes

Iraq, however, is only one of the many countries on Amnesty's list. The use of torture today is common and widespread.

Torture is a product of civilization. Primitive man, like other animals, followed his instincts and killed his enemy as swiftly as the job could be done. Archaeologists who have dug up prehistoric skeletons have found no evidence of torture. Even human sacrifices were made without prolonged suffering. Come the time of the great Roman and Greek civilizations, torture was part of the system. In ancient Athens, a slave's testimony was not considered reliable unless he had been tortured.

The Inquisition

The Catholic Church, appalled by the torture of Christians at the hands of Rome, was for a long period intolerant of torture. Torture, until the time of Pope Innocent IV, was practically unknown in the Western world.

The Inquisition brought back its use. Heretics were forced to undergo a systematic form of torture, while a magistrate sat close by logging carefully the instruments used and the confessions extract-

The use of torture in Europe began to die in the 17th century, not to return in a widespread way until this century. Indeed, the great Eu-ropean empires did much to dampen down its use in the large parts of the world where their writ ran.

During the 20th century, torture has reached a scale that dwarfs even the Middle Ages. In the civil war that followed the Russian Revolution, torture was used sporadically and haphazardly. It was Mussolini's Fascists that were the first modern Western government to make torture an official policy of the state. The Blackshirts in-vented their special techniques — its would only be obligatory when

Three years ago the United Na-Rights set up a working group to attempt to draft a convention against torture. Last month, they at last got around to discussing the means of implementation.

The proposals, pushed most forcefully by the Swedish govern-ment, would give the commission the authority to bypass Article 2 of the UN Charter, which prohibits interference in the internal affairs of member countries. It would extend the jurisdiction to try torture offenses to countries other than where the crime was committed. So, for example, an Iraq police of-ficial suspected of being a wellknown torturer could be arrested while on holiday in London and tried by a British court.

Exposure Feared

Almost every country denies that torture is an official policy. Nearly every country represented at the UN Human Rights Commission makes eloquent speeches saying that torture is abhorrent to civilized man. They will vote on broad resolutions of principle to outlaw it and they say they are considering the Swedish draft. Yet, the fact of the matter is that too many of them do not want a piece of legislation that could actually expose what goes on behind their precedent, and public wonderment. Firming Carter's last year. at each invention of the day added to the sense that something quite new was happening.

The last time a French president completed his term and handed over power to a duly elected successor was in 1953, when Vincent Auriol turned his office over to Rene Coty. Since then, the Fourth Republic was converted to the Fifth, indirect election was changed to a direct public mandate, and, most important, the presidency acquired vast new pow-

So is it going to be a really fresh start and a new France? The answer, like most things French, is contradictory.

The stress put by the newcomers was on continuity and by those going out on the break with the past, itself a reversal of usage.

One of ex-President Valery Giscard d'Estaing's close aides confided, "it's not just a change of gov-ernment. It's a little revolution." Mr. Giscard d'Estaing's friend, Michel Poniatowski, a rarity of public loyalty in the distasteful scramble off the sinking ship, predicted national bankruptcy and said France would regret rejecting. Mr. Giscard d'Estaing within 18 months. The ex-president himself made clear that he doesn't expect to relish retirement and is holding himself "available for the republic" as a "refuge."

Leading the Campaign

But in his brief inauguration speech, Mr. Mitterrand called for reconciliation and pledged himself to "physalism" as "president of all the French." "Hope was the only victor in the election," he said, and he wished it to become "the thing best shared in France."

Of course, the two tones have practical as well as emotional significance. The kind of government Mr. Mitterrand will run and his chance for success will depend on June's legislative elections. Pierre Mauroy, the new prime minister, will have the first all-important task of leading the campaign.

Mr. Mauroy was clearly chosen for that purpose. By personal background and as mayor of the depressed industrial city of Lille, he is identified with the workers and with aspirations for social justice. He is also reassuring to the middle class in a way that less political and more ideological figures would not be.

He has always been a moderate and a reformer. He backed Michel Rocard, who was candidate of the Social Democratic right wing for their party's nomination until Mr. Mitterrand finally said he wanted to run again and Mr. Rocard with-

WASHINGTON -- One of the VV earmarks of the flexibility in the U.S. system of government is its ability at certain times to deal with public questions in a logical, deliberative fashion and at other times to postpone those questions until what appear to be urgently needed actions are taken.
When President Truman proposed the Marshall Plan and the North Atlantic Treaty, Congress used to consider and debate the implications of a permanent U.S. commitment to the military security and economic prosperity of Western Europe. But when Presidents Roosevelt or Johnson were shoving through the measures that came to be called the New Deal or the Great Society, they did not ask Congress or the country to stop and weigh the overall advantages and risks of sharply expanding public-sector expenditures and the scale of government.

Ronald Reagan is operating very much in the Roosevelt-Johnson style. He is pressing for action and postponing debate. No matter that inflation seems to be abating and the economy is rolling along with unexpected vigor — Mr. with unexpected vigor — Mr. Reagan insists that his budget and tax cuts are needed to deal with "the worst economic crisis" since the Great Depression.

No matter that the Soviet Union is hobbled by shortfalls in its agri-culture and industry, is bogged down in Afghanistan and baffled by the Solidarity movement in Poland - Mr. Reagan asserts that record peacetime increases in military spending are needed to cope with the Soviet threat.

program as possible before the inevitable second thoughts about the wisdom of his policies occur. Like Roosevelt and Johnson before him, he is seizing the moment knowing that the question is not if, but when, his leadership will be challenged. The U.S. system permits such efforts to succeed but rarely, and

Mr. Reagan is wise enough to recognize he has such an opportunity. But on the long U.S. holiday weekend [Memorial Day is May 25], with things crawling to at least a temporary halt in Washington, it is possible to step back from the frenetic pace of executive and conpressional action of the past four months, and note some of the large, unexamined propositions underlying Mr. Reagan's program.

When I say "unexamined," I do not mean that Mr. Reagan himself or his aides are unaware of where they are going. Quite the contrary. The blueprint is exceptionally clear to those in control

Test Is Coming

But the propositions are unexamined in serious political debate. Jimmy Carter's infirmities impeded such discussion in the course of the fall campaign and no critic has had the platform from which to challenge the Reagan policies since Election Day.

But do not doubt that such a test is coming. It is guaranteed by the very sweep and boldness of the policies Mr. Reagan is rushing through Consider some of the propositions implicit or explicit in the Reagan program and ask yourself if any or all of them can

One of the first changes, occurring within 48 hours, is that the brain - the organ with the highest enerheart pumping and the gy demands — begins to consume mostly ketones, a breakdown product of fat, rather than glucose. mostly ketones, a breakdown product of fat, rather than glucose, which can only be manufactured from protein.

> "It is the existence of these keiones which makes it possible for the body to preserve lean tis-sue," said Dr. Theodore B. Van Itallie, special adviser on human nutrition to the surgeon general. Because the brain still requires some glucose, a small amount of lean tissue is burned, but most energy now comes from expendable

As starvation continues, there are other adjustments. "Metabolic rate goes down ... physical activity diminishes and some psycholog-ical changes occur," said Dr. Van Itallie. "People become sort of involuted, depressed. They lose in-terest in the outside world."

The pulse slows, blood pressure falls below normal, and the fasting adapts to fasting by falls below normal, and the fasting person goes into a kind of low no switching the brain gear, burning up far less energy than would be predicted for someone the same size who was eating mormally, according to Dr. Owen.

Final Phase

The final phase of starvation begins when all the body's fat stores have been exhausted, and protein from muscle and vital organs must be broken down to feed the brain.

In a hunger striker, death occurs when about half of the lean tissue or protein has been destroyed. Dr. Owen said that in many cases, the muscle wall of the heart grows thin, the remaining fibers begin to fracture, and the heart weakens as a pump. In other cases, the hunger striker dies of pneumonia, because of decreased immunity to infection and difficulty coughing and breathing deeply.

But by then, according to Dr. Van Itallie, the striker has slipped into a coma because "all of the biological processes get slowed down so much" from lack of fuel. "Consciousness does require a certain level of electrical activity in the brain," he said.

Because of the natural sedation. there is little suffering — except, noted Dr. Van Itallie, for those close to the striker.

NATO's Readiness in Arms and Reserves Is Seen by Military as Dangerously Low

By Drew Middleron . New York Times Service

PARIS -- The North Atlantic alliance, despite reassuring words from its foreign and defense ministers, is in a seriously deteriorating military situation.

Soldiers and airmen of the four major North Atlantic Treaty Organization powers — the United States, Britain, West Germany and France - concede privately that the West does not have the men or the arms to carry out its basic strategy of sustained defense along West Germany's frontier against a Soviet attack until reinforcements

Unless the United States and its allies were able to earry out a rapid buildup of conventional forces, the prospect after a few days' fighting would be for the alliance to fall back on tactical nuclear weapons to halt advancing Soviet forces

A Soviet reply, probably with its deployed force of 220 SS-20 missiles, each with three warheads, would probably destroy Western Europe

An American general said that much would depend on the intelligence service's ability to spot and interpret Soviet war preparations and report them to the North Atlantic Council, the alliance's highest political group.

Such a warning could give the West time to mobilize reserves in Europe and to start reinforcement and resupply from the United States, Britain and Canada. Mobilization, however, is a political as well as a military act and many officers doubt the willingness of some countries to undertake such a precautionary move. There are two basic causes for NATO's military insecurity.

One is the improvement, in both quality and quantity, of Soviet conventional arms and regional nuclear forces in Central Europe. The second is a decade of failure by the members, including the United States, to fulfill pledges on force planning and improvements.

Some programs have been delaved by efforts to ensure that every new weapon includes the latest technological aids and improvements. This has been especially true of tanks, like the new American M-1, and a multirole combat plane, the Tornado, built cooperatively by Britain, West Germany and Italy. Neither the tank nor the plane has been deployed in

Whether the most militarily significant reserve formations those from the United States could arrive in Europe after the start of hostilities is uncertain. Atlantic convoys bringing troops and supplies would be under attack and air transports would be vul-

The significance of the U.S. reserves lies in their capacity to provide additional support and technological services to the U.S. 7th Army in West Germany, as well as infantry, armored and artillery units of the National Guard and the Regular Reserve. Both these forces are alarmingly under strength, but they still constitute the largest reserve of trained man-

WASHINGTON - Charles W. Yost, 73, a professional diplomat who served as U.S. ambassador to the United Nations from 1969 to 1971, died Thursday of cancer.

Mr. Yost, a native of Water town, N.Y. and graduate of Princeton University, was one of the few officers with the career rank of ambasssador.

He came out of retirement in 1969 to take the UN post at the request of President Richard M. Nixon. He resigned in 1971 after word leaked out that Mr. Nixon planned to replace him.

Rejecting Mr. Nixon's invitation to remain in government service, Mr. Yost told a news conference "perhaps it's time to be a little uncivil" - a public remark considered daring for a man known as the consummate professional.

Shortly after his resignation, he advocated ending the Vietnam War through the setting of a date for the withdrawal of U.S. forces conditioned on the return of U.S.

Joining the Foreign Service as a vice consul in Cairo in 1931, Mr. Yost dropped out to be a freelance writer in 1933 but returned to the State Department in 1935. Many of his assignments concerned international organizations, and he served as deputy to UN ambassadors Arthur Goldberg and Adlai E. Stevenson in the 1960s. Swiss Film Comes of Age

by Ronald Holloway

URICH — Following the Swiss break-through at the Berlin International Film Festival last February, at which Markus Imhoof's "The Boat Is Full" won citations from five different juries, hopes are high for Alain Tanner's "Eight Years Away." the official Swiss entry at Cannes. Whether or not Tanner makes his mark at Cannes this year, one thing is certain: A new national Swiss cinematography officially came of age in 1981.

Imbool's "The Boat is Full" deserved the acclaim it received at the Berlinale. It deals with the Jewish question, telling the tragic story of a small group of innocent German refugees sent back to sure death over the border in 1942 on a lame excuse that a "full house" can't provide for a few more old men, defenseless women and blameless children.

The film is a co-production between Switzerland and West German and Austrian television. Credit is due to Swiss film subsidy boards for sponsoring such a critical and honest document on national guilt during the difficult war years.

Two other Swiss entries in the Berlinale also impressed critics: Claude Goretta's "La Provinciale" (The Girl from Lorraine), a Swiss-French co-production, and Kurt Gloor's "The Inventor," a Swiss-German co-production. In addition, three important Swiss films were shown in the Berlinale's Forum of Young Cinema: Jean-Luc Godard's "Sauve Qui Peut (La Vie), Villi Hermann, Niklaus Meienberg and Hans Stuerm's "It's Cold in Brandenburg (Kill Hitler)" and the Videoladen Zurich's

"Zurich Is Burning."

These feature films were equally remarkable for their acting performances. Tina Engel of the Schaubuehne Ensemble in Berlin plays one of the Jewish refugees in Imhoofs. The Boat is Full." Bruno Ganz, formerly of the Schaubuehne, is the eccentric protagonist in Gloor's

Gloor on "The Inventor": "I'm also something of an inventor I've also had a couple of personal experiences like dreams, fantasies, fanatic ideas, bet-everything-on-one-card notions. financial dependency, feeling powerless."
When did this all begin? What are the origins of New Swiss Cinema? In 1957, Alain Tanner and Claude Goretta. the co-founders of a film club at the University Geneva, went to London to complete their studies. Together, they made a documentary short on Piccadilly Circus for the British Film Institute, titled "Nice Time." Then they re-turned to Geneva to make shorts and television films for the Suisse Romande network.

During the 1960s, Tanner in the documentary field and Goretta in television were instru-mental in forming the "Groupe de 5," five "proven" directors for whom Suisse Romande provided funds: Tanner, Goretta, Michel Soutter, Jean-Louis Roy and Jean-Jacques Lagrand. It was mutually agreed among the members that once one of the directors received independent funding, he would leave to make more for the part agricing filmmaker. to make room for the next aspiring filmmaker.

Tanner, the first to succeed, did just that.

Meanwhile, Solothurn was developing into a prominent national film festival. The three-day showcase in the old historical town near Bern grew into a well promoted, highly effective five-day festival offering a complete cross sec-tion on the annual national production. Scheduled late in January, the date has proven to be most attractive to French and German critics scouting for films for Berlin and Cannes. Festivals in Locarno and Nyon also increased the prestige of Swiss films abroad. Finally, the Swiss Bund took notice and contributed an insufficient, but welcome annual subsidy of $1.5 million to Swiss productions.

The rest of the story is how the foreign critics responded to the country's leading directo-

ANNES, France — To play golf in Europe, you need golf clubs, shoes, a fairly thick wallet and a very big sense of humor.

The clubs and shoes can be rented at almost every course. Pro shops sell balls and tees. Add in a locker rental, and before you even get to the first hole, you're talking about $6-$9.

Then come the green fees. On some of Europe's public courses, fees are as low as $3. On others, those private clubs that take "paying guests" green fees can run as high as $25-$30. If you find yourself in the middle, add $15-$30. $18. Now the total is $21-$27. Because you probably will not know the course, you'll probably take a caddie. European caddies are not like American caddies, who are often high school kids trying to pick up a few extra bucks on a weekend. European caddies are full-time pros. Many are also grandmothers. Because you can't expect an old lady to schlepp a bag on her shoulder, she'll pull a cart. If there are two of you, that means you will need two caddies -- each another $10-$15. Some $31-$42 later, you are ready to begin.

If you come early in the morning — before 9 a.m. — you will probably find the golf course empty. That not only means there are no foursomes in front of you to slow you down, it also means that the ground keepers have probably not yet whipped the greens. Unwhipped greens putt too slow on both sides of the Atlantic.

If you arrive at 10, expect a long waiting line at the first tee, the second tee, the third tee... and also expect the guys behind you to hit into you every time you study a shot. With the exception of the English, good manners on European golf courses are not what they are in the United States. But then, Europeans don't play golf for the same reason Americans do. The French, for example, think of golf as something you do on a sunny day before and after lunch. France is one of the last countries in Europe to welcome the sport, and it is considered a luxury. There is even a question on the French income-tax form asking if you are a member of a golf club — the assumption being that, if you are, you must be rich and should be paying more taxes.

Because the French were late to take up the game, they are also first to explain all aspects of it to anyone who asks, and everyone who doesn't. It's le slice and le drive, le putt and le

If you are alone, they will not necessarily invite you to play along. And if you find your-self meeting them on the first tee, French golfers always use Monsieur or Madame instead of first names. They also insist on immediately knowing votre handicap. You tell them 12. They announce that theirs is 8, and if you will only give them four shots a side... You explain that it doesn't work that way. They explain that it does. The British and Scots, of course, take their golf seriously, and Great Britain probably of-fers the best courses — hole by hole — outside of the United States. Spanish courses can be rated fair to good by American standards. The Portuguese have golf that is fair — and the oldest caddies on earth. The Swiss bury their golf courses under ski slopes (the snow doesn't always melt until the fourth hole). It's up and

There are some very good courses in Germany, although they tend to be the expensive private ones, and vou might need a letter from your own club's secretary to become a paying guest. Look for fair-to-good golf in Italy, and long golf in Scandinavia in Europe, long courses stand out because, by comparison, European golf is much shorter than American golf. You can find a lot of Par 64s and Par 67s — 5,000-yard courses and

5,500-yard courses - which, at $36 a round. comes to 50 cents a shot for a regulation Par 72. (A rather unique way of looking at the situation. Compare that with the duffer who just breaks 100 at some state course in the United States, where a round, even with a couple of beers afterward, only costs $20. That's 20 cents a shot, including two beers.)

On the other hand, if you are in Europe and want to play golf, there are now enough courses around to find one. If the non-golfer wonders why anyone would want to play on courses that may not meet U.S. standards, why anyone would come to Europe to suffer slices and hooks and poor chip shots (instead of visiting museums and churches and three-star restaurants), the answer is that golf is one of those very very rare things in life: When it's good, it's great. When it's bad, it's still pretty good.

The following are some courses open to the golfer visiting the French Riviera.

The Cote d'Azur suffers in not having a real our championship course; in fact, it cannot even the boast one truly great golf hole. Of the 90 strung out along the Riviera, there isn't a sin-2 degle hole that comes even close to several Pebble Beach or Augusta, or a handful at Royal tuli St. Andrews. They are all under-trapped, with latifiew (or no) water hazards. Golfing here is generally overpriced, and except for a few blinding tees a couple of narrow fairways and some for tees, a couple of narrow fairways and some toy too-sharp doglegs, the five courses rate, at best, its just-about-fair marks.

The hilly Moute Carlo Golf Club is a course 3.11 for billy goats, but it's worth the trek for the view. Cames Mandelien is flat and wide. Turns a B player into an A player. Valbonne is longer than the others but not necessarily any more trouble. Biot is a cow pasture that is really only an overgrown pitch and putt. Moughs — the most chic of the five, is newly built and beautifully kept, although it's not as tough as

Further along the coast, on both sides of the Riviera, are three other courses. Valcros is an hour from St. Tropez, with too many doglegs

Ganz is back again in a supporting role in Goretta's "Girl from Lorraine." playing a businessman who has an illicit affair with the heroine, Nathalie Baye. She, in turn, is one of the three leads in Godard's film. Then there are Angela Winkler (again from the Schaubuehne), who appears in Goretta's film, and Isabelle Huppert (Switzerland's best-known actress) in Godard's film.

An obvious advantage, and impetus, in the development of Swiss cinema is the sharing of acting and directorial talent with France and West Germany. Just one example: It was the theater director Peter Stein of Berlin's Schaubuehne am Halleschen Ufer who "discovered" Bruno Ganz by casting him as the protagonist in several successful stage productions - after which the Swiss actor has made an international name for himself by appearing in Swiss coproductions with France and Germany.

Thus, due to the professional independence that such stars as Ganz and Huppert have achieved abroad, Swiss filmmakers can easily survive by seeking financial support for coproductions with the two powerful film-producing countries at their doorstep.

This fruitful modus vivendi extends back for two decades. Godard was raised in Switzerland and made his last film there. Huppert, who rocketed to fame in Claude Goretta's "The Lace Maker" (1977), works mostly in France now - while Nathalie Baye, a French actress who plays "La Provinciale" in Goretta's new film, divides her time between France and Switzerland on co-production projects.

Two Swiss-born directors, Niklaus Schilling and Erwin Keusch, have also contributed significantly to the growth of New German Cine-

New Swiss Cinema has developed more from within, however. There is a friendly giveand-take between French-Swiss and German-Swiss directors. The cineastes romands made their mark in the early 1970s by making feature films for television in Geneva. The "Zurich School" of German-Swiss directors, on the other hand, cut their teeth on documentaries and Swiss-dialect feature films that did not travel easily but drew a solid response at home, before finding an outlet for their best productions at the Berlin Film Festival.

By the mid-1970s the Solothurn festival of national films of every genre (founded in 1965), together with the Swiss Film Center and the Swiss Association of Filmmakers (both in Zurich), were active clearing stations for the best the two "schools" had to offer.

A Swiss film is easily recognizable. Even the fiction-documentary. "It's Cold in Brandenburg," stays relatively close to home. It follows the fate of a conscientious Swiss Catholic compelled to attempt an assassination of Hitler and ends with his execution by guillotine in 1941 at Berlin-Ploetzensee after a 30-month imprisonment. The film was a response by the documentary team of Hermann. Meienberg and Stuerm to a Rolf Hochhuth article titled

Maurice B" that described the case. Swiss directors tend to identify with their films, Imbool on "The Boat Is Full": "I want to show that nothing has really changed in small Swiss villages when unwelcome foreign rial talent. Tanner was the first to achieve an international reputation: His "Charles, Dead or Alive" (1969) was chosen for Critics' Week at Cannes. Then his "The Salamander" (1971) was the hit of the Directors' Fortnight Next came his box-office successes in French and German art houses, "Return from Africa" (1973) and "The Middle of the World" (1974), followed by "Jonas Who Will Be 25 in the Year 2000" (1976), which some recognized as the ultimate intellectual statement on the post-Student Reform Movement of 1968.

Now Tanner's interests have shifted to the realm of the metaphor and allegory. "Messidor" (1978) followed a pair of teen-age girls on a flight from themselves across Switzerland. Although not a prizewinner, it was far and away the most important entry at the Berlin Film Festival in 1979. His "Light Years Away," now at Cannes, is the story of an unusual relationship between an aging eccentric (Trevor Howard) inhabiting a graveyard shed and a boy of 17 who has to "prove himself" to be admitted into a ritualized friendship.

After Tanner came Goretta, who won a Special Jury Prize at Cannes for his, "The Invitation" (1973), and was thrust on to the world film scene (with Isabelle Huppert) after the success of "The Lace Maker" (1977).
"La Provinciale" (1980), with Nathalie Baye

as the fragile and sensitive girl from the prov-inces seeking employment in Paris, secured Goretta a place as one of cinema's profound observers of human behavior. His theme is the loser in an impersonal society, and his images crackle with the tensions of unspoken emotional relationships.

A list of prominent French-Swiss directors must include Michel Soutter ("The Surveyors," 1972), Francis Reusser ("Le Grand Soir." 1976), Patricia Moraz ("The Indians Are Not Far Away," 1977) and Yves Yersin ("Little Escapes," 1979). Reusser's "Seuls" (1981), the story of a man haunted by his childhood memories, is in the Directors' Fortnight at Cannes. The "Zurich School" of German-Swiss directors did not come into their own until the mid-1970s. They made films with a document tary bent whose very titles hinted of sociopolitical treatises rather than aesthetic-minded en tertainment parratives. The breakthrough for them at home was Rolf Lyssy's film "The Swissmakers" (1978), a hilarious comedy on the red tape foreigners have to go through to ecome Swiss citizens.

This joke on the bureaucracy had an ironic commercial twist as well: One observant Swiss critic noticed that the entertainment tax on this film alone amounted to more than the subsidy grant by the City of Zurich to Swiss film productions. "The Swissmakers" was a sellout in Switzerland for a solid year, and ran equally well in West German cinemas.

Now Imhoof's "The Boat Is Full" is on the scene to reap more artistic and commercial rewards for the German Swiss filmmakers. The big question now is whether New Swiss Cinema must depend on co-productions to maintain its quality. Or whether the "Action Swiss Film," a movement filmmakers began to alert government officials to their needs, will bear fruit where it counts - an effectively regulated subsidy system. At the last legislative period. only a single vote more was needed to tip the scales in the direction of one of the most exciting national cinematographies on the European scene today.

Kabuki Family Pays Homage to Venerable Forebears feel about performing in memory of their dis-

by Donald Kirk

OKYO - It's what a foreigner would call a "cameo role," a few fleeting minutes in which an aging man in brown, with brown headpiece, moves angularly, a trifle awkwardly — an owl dancng with the leaves of winter.

Incidental though the scene might appear in five-hour evening of Kabuki, Japan's traditional but still popular theater, it is charged with a dramatic intensity that goes far beyond the pretty little frolic on the broad stage of the Kabuki-za Theater.

This is the first time that Once Kuroemon in the role of the owl, has appeared in a Kabuki drama since he suffered a stroke 12 years ago in the midst of rehearsals for Harold Rome's Japanese-language musical version of "Gone With The Wind." He was to have played Scarlet O'Hara's father. "I was so worried by my absence," said Kuroemon, interviewed during the current run (to May 28) of the Dan-Giku Sai festival here. 'Now I'm relaxing, I'm even enjoying it.' Just as he managed to hide the paralysis of his right side during the performance, so Kuroemon, dressed like a Japanese business executive in dark blue suit and striped tie, could somehow talk and gesture in a fashion that seemed completely natural.

It was not to demonstrate his durability, however, that Kuroemon returned to Japan from his home in the United States, where he has lived for most of the past decade. It was to pay homage to his venerated father, Kikugoro VI, who died in 1949, to his grandfather, Kikugoro V. and to another great of the Kabuki stage. Danjuro IX, that Kuroemon agreed to take part in a program designed as a special tribute to their enduring contributions to Kabuki.

"It's the 33rd year since my father's death." said Kuroemon, adding that the Buddhist calendar includes the year of births, weddings and deaths in computing anniversaries. "For us, it is the most important memorial since the third year after his death. Even though I cannot speak or move properly, I had to come back for this performance."

Kuroemon is only one of perhaps a dozen descendants of Kikugoro V and VI and Danjuro IX to appear during a full day's entertain-ment, which begins with a two-act drama immortalized by Kikugoro VI in 1925.

Playing opposite him in the winter scene is his stepbrother, Once Baiko, one of six Kabuki performers whom the Japanese government dubbed "living national treasures" for their consummate skill. They perpetuate the legacy of a rich cultural past, untrammeled by the Western influence that came into the country during the Meiji restoration in the late 19th century. In one scene, Baiko, with exquisite grace appears as a playful leaf in a subtly darkshaded kimono. As in the Noh play, the more formal and less popular form of Japanese drama, women's roles in Kabuki are played by men. The custom dates back to the Shogun femitsu, who not only ordered the massacre of Christians and closed Japan to the outside world, but banned all women from the stage in Kuroemon, 59 and six years younger than Baiko, showed no sign of sibling rivalry as he discussed playing opposite his stepbrother.

"When my father was alive," he said, eyes twinkling, lips curled in a slightly lepsided smile. "he never referred to Baiko as his adopted son." He recalled how their childhood was devoted to learning the discipline of training and initiation into the Kabuki family. "Baiko to my father was a son and to me was a real brother. It's exciting to be with him again, even though it's a little bit frightening, too."

The fine lines of his face reflected some of frustrations of his career. Kurgernon spent seven years as a "visiting artist" at Harvard's Loeb Drama Center before "semiretiring" a year ago. "I can never come back," he said. "I believe my brain is somehow damaged, too. I have a bad memory for lines. In my part as an owl I do not speak." Then his face quickly brightened. "But actors never retire," he added. "so I am still active."

For the illustrious Baiko, a celebrity here, retirement is not worth thinking about: "Kabuki actors learn as they grow older. We must always train and study."

Baiko appeared in two other performances that evening (one an entire three-act drama) in the roles of a lovelorn clerk and a gangster on the run. But he still prefers the women's parts. "I can't play the tough type as well," he said.
"My father and my grandfather both played the same women's roles that I do, but when I play I add my own style. I think I am more

Baiko's own son, Kikugoro VII, has also gravitated to women's roles. His gentle porprincess in a single evening enthralled an audience of men and women who packed the 2,000-seat theater. Shy offstage, however, Kikugoro VII preferred to let his cousin, Nakamura Kankuro, son of one of Kikugoro VI's woman's role is like a painting. His uncle Baiko agreed. "A man playing a woman's role is like a dream," be said. "The

Grenoble — A Bustling Metropolis Nestled in the Alps

RENOBLE -- Crossroads and capital of the French Alps, this bustling basin of a city is looked upon by tourists mostly as a gateway to such ski resorts as Alpe d'Huez. Chamrousse. Deux Alpes and Villard-de-Lans.

Shuttling between glassy railroad station and adjacent bus depot, few foreigners see more of Grenoble than the giant Alexander

Calder stabile in the station plaza. Some even pass under its arched legs without looking up — though to stand back and see it at dusk. etched stark, dark and metallic against a fading backdrop of mountains, is to know that there can be splendor in black and gray, too.

Beyond the plaza's facade of low-slung hotels stretches a splendid city of broad boulevards and stately squares. Grenoble has a symmetrical elegance and a certain old-world charm that radiates from its tree-lined streets, wrought-iron grillwork and balconies.

It is a sort of muted Alpine New Orleans breathing vigor instead of languor. Lingering, in fact, seems to be equated with loitering here, for the city is growing — from 70,000 people in 1900 to 100,000 just after World War II, to 400,000 today. More than in many a metropolis, one feels the tempo of a town in a hurry. But Grenoble's graces come not from everyday contact with people-on-the-move, but from the treasures secreted within a city ringed by the grandeur of mountains. Almost every street fanning out from the station leads sooner or later to the Isere river, which winds through the city and holds much of the secret In 43 B.C., a Roman army officer threw a bridge over the water to force entry and create a city. More than 19 centuries later, in 1869, French pioneers led by the engineer Aristide Berges immeled into the Alps, harnessing waterfalls into the "White Power" that made

Grenoble the hydroelectric center of France. Near the place where the Romans first penetrated stands a stunning wrought-iron suspen-sion bridge linking Grenoble's right bank to the more recent place St. Andre. Its 13th-century church contains both the tomb of the chevalier Bayard (1473-1524), that romantic knight errant "without fear or reproach," and the Renaissance residence of the dauphins, now the Palais de Justice.

From the adjacent municipal gardens, an ultra-modern cable car's six-seat glass bubble takes passengers for an unclittered, incompar-able five-minute ride over the Isere, above the orange roofs of Old Grenoble's Italian quarter and, after an ominous pause midway for pac-ture-taking, on up to the craggy ruins of a bastille, nearly a thousand feet above the city's downtown altitude of 214 meters (702 feet). At the top are a good terrace cafe, a nearby restaurant, a Museum of Old Automobiles, and a view of the Belledonne and Vercors mountain ranges. On a clear day, you can see Mont-Blanc, almost a hundred miles away.

Part way up that same hill, 10 minutes easy climb from the right bank, is the Dauphinois. Museum, skillfully built into an old convent. It imaginatively displays the culture of mountain children (one can sit in a one-room schoolhouse or try to decipher nursery rhymes in: French dialect) and the art of glovemaking, a mainstay of Grenoble for six centuries.

Grenoble is a marvelous museum city with a few quirky surprises. Facing the municipal gar-dens, in the former city hall, is the Stendhal Museum, retracing the life of the city's most illustrious literary native, while the great man's birthplace itself (at 14 me Jean-Jacques Rousseau; open Monday, Wednesday and Saturday afternoons) now houses a provocative museum of the World War II Resistance (very strong here), occupation and deportation.

On a gem of a square, place de Verdun, stands the Museum of Painting and Sculpture somewhat awkwardly built into a library, but ingeniously hiding its shortcomings and stressing its strengths: the 17th and 20th centuries. The former is well represented by, among others, Rubens, Murillo and, in particular, Zurbaran's mystical "Adoration of the Shep-

Our century begins with Fauvists and Freach Expressionists followed by healthy infusions of Chagali and Soutine and a Calder mobile. Oddly enough, an upstairs wing is de-world to Egyptology, ranging from mummies and refics to 20th-century pop art (open after-noons only). Nearby, imbedded in a park with a mini-zoo and animal sculpunts, is a Museum of Natural History embracing zoology, palacontology and Alpine minerals. Virtually all museums in Grenoble have free admission.

All these are within walking distance of the station, as are the 12th- to 13th-century Notre Dame Cathedral and the audacious Palais des Sports complex, built for the 1968. Winter Olympics in Grenoble with separate ice rinks for speed and figure skaling.

A 25-minute ride or bus 22 from the station will take one to the University of Grenoble. Jounded in 1339 and relocated between 1960 and 1977 on a 450-acre campus in the suburb of St-Martin-d'Heres. The campus, with 30,000 students, is a sloping, soaring modern artist's fantasy in stone, glass and concrete.

Combining good Habitat with academic Disneyland amid a glistening classic setting of mountains and blue sky, it is the future on a launching pad. In many ways it is symbolic of Grenoble: a dynamic city that is not just a jump-off for ski resorts but an exciting destination in its own right:

'McVicar': England's Public Enemy No. 1

by Michael Zwerin

ARIS — "I was just a middle-of-the-road robber, nothing like shooting peo-ple up. Pretty tame stuff really," says John McVicar.

Nevertheless, this young Englishman went to Parkhurst Prison for armed robbery in 1964. escaped four years later and was Great Britain's Public Enemy No. 1 for two years, until he was recaptured and sent to the high security installation at Durham. There he won a degree in sociology and, in 1978, a pardon.

Now a free-lance journalist ("I've turned into a so-much-a-thousand-words man"), he writes a sports column in the New Statesman. a political column in Social Worker Magazine and writes and lectures on criminology.

A new film based on his autobiographical book, which sold more than 100,000 copies in Britain, has been released in Paris as "McVicar." Produced by the British rock group The Who, it stars lead singer Roger Daltrey, McVi-car, who recently passed through town to promote the movie, wrote the screenplay.

He learned the craft of writing by churning out letters of complaint to prison authorities and the media: "One of the few ways you can challenge them is on paper, and while I was taking my degree I used to lambast officials as a sort of hobby," he said. "A high official came to me and said: If you keep this up you might find yourself transferred. We're letting you learn intellectual skills and now you turn them on the staff.' That would have disrupted my studies. And he had a point, so I stopped." At 41. McVicar has the muscular arms and hard, flat stomach of a weight lifter. With a chiseled face that does not smile easily, graying hair and bright eyes, he reminds you of a coal miner who has risen out of the pits to become

Commenting on the movie, he said: "It's not a great film, but I'm not embarrassed by it. A movie about gangsters starring a rock star could have been much worse. It's accurate as far as it goes. There are some flat spots, but Daltrey acts well and at least it doesn't have all that silly Starsky and Hutch stuff.

"I was surprised, though, when I saw that the director took co-credit for writing it. He sort of free rode a bit. We discussed it together, obviously, but he never wrote a word. I was a bit pissed off at first,"

How did he feel about being Public Enemy No. 1? "I had made a deal with a couple of detectives who were going to drop certain charges if I gave them some money." he ex-plained. "And while they fulfilled their side of the bargain. I welshed on mine. They were on the take, but we shook on it and they respected my word. I was really outrageous. I saw them as people you don't give your word to. So they had this thing about me and looked hard for me while I was on the lam, and I think blew up my case more than it warranted. There wasn't much else happening in England at the time, not many guys going around blasting people, so I got tagged Public Enemy No. I kind of by default."

How does he feel about prison? McVicar is not confused at all: "Prisons are supposed to punish, not reform. Once you get into this indeterminate sentencing, where a guy's term is dependent on officials' opinion of whether or not he's reformed, you have to rely on the virtuousness of officials and you lose the concept of the punishment fitting the crime. of the punishment fitting the crime.

"You turn out good actors and guys with broken spirits rather than reformed convicts. The punishment should be humane, but it should also be uniform and relative to the gravity of the offense."

"Does crime pay? As somebody once said about Bert Lance: 'In order to rob a bank you have to own a bank.' "

"Brecht said that, in The Threepenny Opera," McVicar shot back without losing a beat. "Crime pays the rich, let's face it. It seems to pay organized crime. You don't see too many big shots serving time."

Did he read a lot in jail?

"I read a lot of sociology and psychology, people like Durkheim, Freud and Marx. I suppose I'm vaguely a Marxist in the sense that I like to be a critic. In order to be a critic, you've got to take a Marxist perspective, without necessarily accepting the entire package. Like Galbraith uses Marxist ideas occasionally, though he's certainly not a Marxist.

"In any case, reading pricked my conscience. My identity was no longer involved with the criminal way of life. It was a game I used to enjoy. Being a thief is interesting. The trouble is they put you in prison for it."

Strong New Indian Films at Cannes

by Gene Moskowitz

ANNES - A new crop of energetic and creative directors from India have started a "New Wave" that can be seen swelling around the Cannes Film Festival. There is so much activity that Malati Tambay Vaidya, the imposing woman who heads India's National Film Development Corporation (NFDC) has her hands full here. selling important new Indian films.

For the first time, in a drive for world sales. India has a booth to sell its films abroad. Two films, "Vicious Circle" and "Why Albert Pinto is Angry." feature in the Director's Fortnight. Mani Kaul's experimental film, "Arising From the Surface," features in the noncompeting of-ficial section, and Govind Nihalani's "Cry of the Wounded," is in the film market. India produces 780 films a year. With 10,000 theaters and 4 billion spectators annually, the film industry has little competition from television and remains both the principal diversion of the masses and the art form of the elite. Now a rash of new films, so far screened abroad only at festivals, has shown that India can produce more than just the commercial musicals so popular in Asia and the Middle Western audiences know Indian film almost exclusively through the probing and humanis-tic films of Satyajit Ray. But Mrinal Sen, a fellow Bengali, has also sparked attention abroad. An indication there was something astir in indian cinema became apparent at the New Delhi International Film Festival last January, when the Grand Prix was won for the first time by an Indian entrant, Nihalani's "Cry of the Wounded."

"Wounded" puts a Hollywood theme in a typically Indian context, delving deeply into political corruption and the exploitation of tribal workers. A young, idealistic lawyer finds himself sleuthing to discover why his client, a tribal worker accused of killing his wife, will not talk. Though he himself is physically threatened, the lawyer finally discovers that the woman was raped and killed by local bosses when her husband made trouble about working conditions in the fields. The worker's silence was due to fear for his young sister and his horror and shame after the rape of his wife.

The film has been deservedly popular in In-dia even though it has none of the songs, dances and melodrama or frilly romantic themes that are the mainstay of Indian cinema. Though the characters are sketchy symbols of an ailing society, the film effectively puts its social and political message across, and has has attracted serious attention in Cannes' film market this week, particularly among the East-ern Europeans and Africans. Rabindra Dhamaraj's "Vicious Circle" focuses on a slum where the characters cope and prevail despite hopeless circumstances. The director adds a Marxist note, warning that circumstances must change before people and conditions can. Unfortunately, this bright director died last February, but the film is a testimonial to the new and outspoken talent in a country where kissing and nudity are taboo. . "Albert Pinto," directed by Saced Mirza, is an observant comedy underlaid with comment on the exploitation of workers and the position of women in India's lower middle classes. Reminiscent of America's social comedies of the 1930s, it has one contemporary touch: its main character, Pinto, is not unlike John Travolta in "Saturday Night Fever."

Pinto is a good mechanic doted upon by the rich, who invite him for drinks and lend him their cars. In the film he is transformed from a smug, macho worker into a concerned, committed man with a social conscience. It has won excellent response and good reviews here. Next month, the Museum of Modern Art in

New York is mounting the most comprehen-sive season of Indian films ever assembled. Entitled "Film India." it features a complete re-trospective of Ray's films and a sample of old and new films (it runs to October).

A recent boost to the industry was the establishment in 1980 of India's NFDC, a semi-autonomous organization that has the right to import all forms film and the stable of import all foreign films except those of Russia and of the U.S. majors. The NFDC receives government funds to make films that treat important subjects, distributes them, builds the-aters and handles foreign sales. Its director. Mrs. Vaidya formerly at the bureau of tour-ism, believes that if she could encourage more tourists to come to India, she could get more Indian films sold abroad.

She is encouraged by the response to Sir Richard Attenborough's $22-million film, "Gandhi," some slides of which are being shown at Cannes. At first bitterly opposed by local filmmakers, important intellectuals and political figures. "Gandhi" finally received grudging acceptance and shows that big "important" films can now be made in India.

The Indian government is co-producing the film, guaranteeing more than $6.5 million dollars raised from private sources. The rest of the $22 million came from a U.S.-British investment group. Many Indian filmmakers wonder why such monies are not available to them, though, ironically, Nihalani, director of "Wounded," was second unit director on "Gandhi." He believes that if the film, which uses local players and technicians, is successful it will draw world attention to India.

In the first week of Cannes, attendance was down and the reaction to the major films far from enthusiastic. This belps countries like India, that often do not attract attention here. Now they are getting a chance to secure a posi-tion in the world film market.

Berto's 'Neige' Looks Like a Winner after Bobby is killed. The author-directors in-

by Thomas Quinn Curtiss

ANNES — The French film "Neige," written and co-directed by Juliet Berto and Jean-Henri Roger, is a happy surprise of the Cannes film festival. Entered originally in the Camera d'Or section (a competition among first features), it has now been promoted to participate for honors on the main official program as well. Luck is with it and it has the bold look of a winner.

Quick and compelling, "Neige" takes place on the tawdry Paris boulevard that runs between Barbes and Pigalle. There is electric excitement and urgency to the action, which depicts in vivid flashes the clandestine trade in heroin. ("Snow" is slang for cocaine in English, but the French usage of neige covers heroin and all powder narcotics.)

The film is utterly different from most drugtraffic thrillers. This is no gross metodrama, but a milieu study in the French literary tradition of Zolaesque naturalism. At times it suggests the Montinartre underworld that Francis Carco and Charles-Henri Hirsch chronicled at the turn of the century, altered in costume and background but essentially unchanged.

The scene has been drawn with the accuracy of a documentary and the characters, despite some eccentricities, have a recognizable reality. There is Anita, a cafe barmaid, and Bobby, a wild boy from the West Indies who operates as a minor pusher and is shot down by the police; Willy, the karate champion who gives demonstrations at a local stadium; Jocko, a black pastor who conducts a temple for his people; Bruno, a taxi driver who turns informer to obtain his wife's parole, and Betty, a female impersonator of the cabarets desperate for a fix volved this crew of hapless humans in a drama of hypnotic fascination.

"Neige" is Juliet Berto's first attempt at directing (she has been acting since she was 19). She also stars in the film. At 34, Berto has them "La Chinoise" and "Week End" — Jo-seph Losey's "Mr. Klein" and some 30 others. She has made but a single stage appearance, in the dramatization of George Moore's story of the Dublin hotel valet who was discovered to be a woman in disguise upon her death, enti-tled "Alan Nobbs."

had," she recalls. "It was a completely asexual role. That woman pretended to be a man not from any desire to be a man but because a man earned more money. It was a tragedy of economics really, various projects. The directorial touch of "Neige" bears marks of Godard's influence. "We shot the film in 42 days, all of it in the streets and cafes of Pigalle, in the night, in the cold and much of it during the Christmas holidays when a traveling fair sets up on the boule-vard." Berto says. "We had to win the confidence of the people of the district to work at all. We knew if we did so in three days, we would be able to shoot there. If not, we would have had to move out. "There was curiosity at first, and then they got used to us. We wanted to catch the scene as it really is. We'd sometimes stop working for 20 minutes or more and, when the inquisitive had drifted away, we'd start again. We lived in the Pigalle district while we were preparing the script, getting to know it from inside. Above all, we wanted to avoid the usual surface Pigalle of the movies and find the real

All the extras in the film were passers-by, but the company includes the noted actor Jean-Francois Stevenin as the karate expert and Robert Liensol, the Guadeloupe-born black actor who often works on the Paris stage in Roger Blin's production of Genet's "Les Negres" and in Jean-Louis Barrault's production of Shehade's "Le Voyage" - as the pas-

Berto and Roger's next project is "Cap Canaille," an expose of Marseilles nightlife, to be filmed in the port city in the autumn.

Dealers Show 'Extraordinary Objects'

by Souren Melikian

ARIS — For the last three years, 107 Paris dealers concentrated within 6,000 square meters along the quai Voltaire, the rue de Lille and the rue de l'Universite have been beating their war drums to a single slogan: "The Extraordinary Object." Their display continues through Monday, May 25, from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m.

The reason for this outburst, so uncharacteristic of a traditionally reserved profession, is not that the dealers have all at once unexpectedly discovered extraordinary objects. To stress the obvious, this area has been a stronghold of art dealing for over a century and probably has at all times a higher concentra-tion of extraordinary objects than most areas in the Old World.

It is amusing to see Michel Vandermeersch, on the corner of the quai Voltaire and the rue de Beaune, go out of his way to draw public attention to a faience stool of the late 17th century from Rouen in his window, though it is true that there are only six or seven such stools on record in the whole market.

But a similar comment probably applies to other pieces in the stock of Michel Vandermeersch, who is the fourth-generation member in a line of porcelain dealers and one of the leading European figures in his speciality. Much the same may be said of his colleague Jean Nicolier, who is perhaps the greatest connoisseur in French porcelain and faience of the 17th and 18th centuries anywhere in Europe,

Going up in the hierarchy of art, neither Edouard Bresset nor Brimo de Laroussilhe, also heirs to a long tradition of dealing, need to advertise their excellence in works of art of the Middle Ages and the Renaissance — though Bresset did make a touching effort to get hold of something truly "unusual."

He found a 17th-century "gueridon" or circular table on a central pillar resting on a tripod base, that displays a unique decoration in straw marquetry. The details are so minute and perfect in execution that, despite its damaged condition, it is bound to end up in a furniture museum. The paradox is that Bresset, who has been selling to museums and major collectors for the last 30 years or so - last year he sold a marvelous Romanesque carving of Jesus to the Louvre — does not need the marquetry piece to make the point that he sells rare works of art. Everybody knows that. Those most likely to benefit from these Five Days' are the newcomers like Alain Demachy, who has just taken over the Galerie Camoin. He introduced some fancy 19th-century furniture alongside more impressive pieces, such as a marquetry rolltop desk by Roentgen. Gisele Croes of Brussels displays Asian art on the same premises.

What all this really emphasizes is the antique dealers' determination to fight back the formidable offensive of the auction rooms, who get all the publicity because auctions are events and, as such, are newsworthy. In contrast, sedling from a gallery is no news — just the normal run of things. Besides, gallery transactions can seidom be publicized. The buyer wants to remain anonymous and, unlike auction rooms, the seller is rarely anxious to advertise the fantastic price he got for his piece - the well-known greed of tax collectors being

The most positive aspect of such a seemingly pointless show concerns private buyers who are too shy ever to set foot in a gallery. It throws all the doors wide open. They can walk in without having to justify their presence, just as they do in auction rooms, and discover that taken together all these galleries add up to the equivalent of 15 or 20 fabulous auctions.

At Renoncourt's they will see more top-quality furniture of the early Romantic period in yellow veneer than at any Drouot sale. At around, touch and ask questions about what is one of the greatest Louis XV period commodes offered in the trade in the last decade. It once graced the Farman Collection, auctioned at Drouot some years ago, and is matched by two other pieces — one at Buckingham Palace and the other in the papal collection.

The other positive aspect for experienced collectors is the chance to look for extraordinary objects at smaller galleries where they might not think of looking. Delvaille's, in the rue de Beaune, had an early Louis XV "com-mode tombeau," c.1725-30, with ormolu fitt-ings worthy of a Versailles piece of furniture. It is the finest I have ever seen.

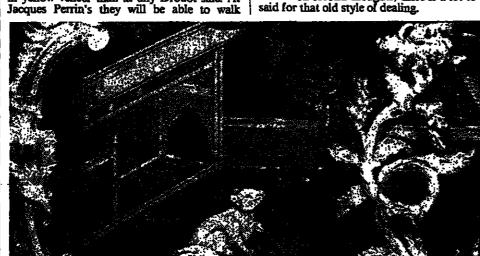

Further up the street in a tiny shop run by Jean-Michel Gueneau and Jean-Pierre Calanca, both in their 30s, was a large size 17thcentury painted wood model of a baroque building decorated with the emblems of the Order of the Holy Spirit and of the Golden Fleece. Any museum devoted to architectural history would gladly bag such a piece.

Gueneau has an alternative "extraordinary object": a double-barreled gun signed by Lepage, one of the great French gunmakers, datable to 1802. It is numbered 586: No. 585 was made for Prince de Talleyrand and No. 587 for Napoleon Bonaparte, only a year before his coronation. For Gueneau sells a bit of everything, as most antique dealers used to.

And on second thoughts, there is a lot to be said for that old style of dealing.

Galleries in Paris: Lam, Gilbert and George

ARIS -- Ed Pashire is an entirely original Expressionist whose idiom is altogether contemporary. His style has evolved over the years. His human subjects, which used to be electric freaks out of a punk imagination long before any polychrome punk stepped out with green and strawberry hair, are now treated as though they had been mutilated by an improper transmission on color television.

They still have slick and fashionable attitudes, but the lipless, eyeless, noseless faces appear incomplete now due to a failure of perception on the part of the transmitting machinery which, in compensation, entertains the eye with some vivid colors. Pashke's work is ing metaphor of modern man's situation. (Galerie Darthea Speyer, 6 rue Jacques Callot, Paris 6, to June 6).

Andre Marfaing has been a consistently anstere representative of French gestural abstrac-tion, working always with black or sepia colors applied in large areas broken open by gashes of white. The effect is sometimes reminiscent (in a nonrepresentational way) of Rembrandt's structure of dark spaces cloven by bursts of light. The exhibition at the Galerie Erval (16 rue de Seine Paris 6, to May 31) is devoted to works on paper.

Louttre B. has an easygoing style and subject matter (mostly one or several trees in a flat landscape) that is further enhanced by the easygoing charm of his color. Some years ago he made news by producing a series of wood-cuts 7 meters by 2 meters — probably the larg-est ever made. His current exhibition (Galerie Fabien Boulakia, 20 rue Bonaparte, Paris 6, to June 6) is devoted to oils, many of them rather large, all in mild, good-humored colors.

Didier Stephant plays trompe-l'oril games with compressed wood panels. One corner of the panel has been broken off (for instance) and stands painted into the picture in a way that teases the viewer with the paradox of the painting as object and the painting as illusion. (Galerie Krief-Raymond, 19 rue Guenegaud, Paris 6, to June 2).

The Galerie de l'Imagerie, (9 rue Dante, Par-is 5, to May 30), is showing posters of Leonotto Cappiello whose works are currently on display at the Grand Palais.

Jean-Michel Folon is internationally known for his magazine covers and a wistful mood of contemporary bafflement that is constantly expressed, in simple shapes and colors, in all his work. The show at the Belgian Cultural Center (127 rue Saint Martin, Paris 4, to June 14) is devoted to his illustrations for books by Ray Bradbury, Lewis Carroll, Franz Kafka, Jorge

Los Laurin Lam is a lady who has many friends among writers of various nationalities. Her exhibition at the Galerie l'Oeil-de-Boeuf (53 rue Quincampoix, Paris 4, to May 30) is devoted to collages and prints depicting these writers in humorous form. Each one of them is turned into a totemic animal - Pablo Neruda is a tapir, Gabriel Garcia Marquez a thoughtful monkey, Milan Kundera a caged water buffalo. The result is fresh and unpretentious, and should provide illustrations for future books on literary history.

In recent years Gerard Schlosser's work was easy to recognize — big photorealist paintings in which an arm, a leg, a thigh, clothed or made, occluded the lower half of the canvas. The current exhibition (at the Galerie Beau-bourg, 23 rue du Renard, Paris 4, to May 30) consequently is a new departure for him. The photorealism tends to disappear from the brushwork, although his subject is the luxuriant abundance of tall, brown grass.

The tectuaique is something new, too. Each blade of grass is rendered by a single brush-stroke and the effect is strikingly realistic. But at the same time there is a rhythmic flux in the thousands of strokes that expresses a painter's pleasure in his medium. In a way, these paintings could do without any background at all.

One also gets a novel pleasure thinking of the hours Schlosser must have spent observing how the long blades of summer grass come to

Gilbert and George have carried a simple idea to manic extremes and thus earned themselves a niche in the avant-garde. Both British artists studied sculpture, but when you are young and hard up, who can afford the materials? So they painted themselves with bronze or silver paint and stood motionless, in soberly tailored suits, for long days in galleries or mu-

Today they are showing large photo mosaics at the Galerie Chantal Crousel (80 rue Quincampoix, Paris 3). The photos are naturally described as sculptures.

Krasno attracted attention in recent years by making delicate objects (frequently a body or part of one emerging from an egg) in creamy white, beautifully grained paper. Today, in the Boutique Philippe Tailleur (21 passage Vero-Dodat, Paris 1, to June 20) he is displaying an egg-shaped card game made of photographs of egg-shaped plaster objects, also shown in this exhibition. De Pisis: Italian Poet, Painter's Painter

by Edith Schloss

OME — Filippo De Pisis is the perfect example of the painterly painter. His eye lights on an entity and then, through the senses and the mind to the hand, there is one taut quicksilver impulse - an impulse sustained precariously at the peak of perception and emotion.

The color, fragrance and the texture of fruit, weather, petals, shellfish and pearly flesh, understood in an instant of sharp pleasure, are turned into a fabric of quivering brush strokes that attack the canvas. With his keen appenie and intelligence. De Pisis enlarges on ordinary occurrences — brisk translucent sea skies, cut flowers, a crab on the window sill of a Venetian backyard, a boy getting up from an untidy bed, glistening mussels on wet sand, scarlet sealing wax on a desk — catching the essence of the little feasts of daily life and transforming them to the measure of poetry.

De Pisis was a poet as well as a painter. Born in Ferrara in 1896, he studied literature at the University of Bologna, particularly the poetry of Baudelaire, Verlaine and Rimbaud. In Ferrara again later, he became friends with the painters De Chirico, Savinio and Carra - all sensitive to the bewitching shadows and echoing memories of this old town, once the reign of Renaissance princes.

He kept a studio lined with shelves on which nested the most disparate objects he had collected. He named it the "Metaphysical room. At the time; he and his friends were engaged in exploring a new style of painting, where objects not found together in real life kept company on strange and dreamlike canvases.

They called it. "Metaphysical Art." It was to become one of the strongest indigenous Italian movements, the first step toward the development of a new school in France, Surrealism. After World War I, De Pisis went to Rome and eventually developed a manner quite his own, which was then confirmed by long stays in Paris, in contact with Soutine, Marisse and other painters of the day. After living in Milan for a while, he settled in Venice.

He bought a small palace there, kept a parrot, invented exquisite private dimers, entertained young sailors. He was honored and exhibited all over Europe and, in 1948, was given a hall at the Venice Biemale. Ill off and on for years, he died in Milan in 1956.

A volatile, extravagant personality, a man of elegant tastes and predilections, De Pisis lived on the edge of his feelings. His pictures, seemingly evanescent and delicate, vibrate w wiry energy, a hidden tragic sensibility.

He has been called an Expressionist, b is too subtle for that. Rather he is a very

ARIS -- Several years ago a young Frenchman named Robert Seve was making a film about the museum in Bangui in the Central African Republic. ("There's not much left of it now," he remembers, "because Bokassa kept giving away pieces from its collections to visitors and friends.") His technical technical assistant was the museum's night watchman, who wore a loincloth and carried bow and arrows but did an excellent job on the dolly shots.

One evening, Seve, who had opted to work in Bangui in 1967 in lieu of military service, was stowing away his gear when he came across some drawings that he immediately liked. They were the work of Clement-Marie Biazin, a Central African artist whose work he was to encourage and promote for the next 14 years. Biazin died, aged 57, early this year, and Seve is still struggling to make him known.

Biazin, who was born in 1924, was the child of a mason and a peasant woman of the Yakoma tribe. He had only the rudiments of schooling, but when he was 22 he decided that he wanted to see the world.

For 20 years he wandered on foot through his own Central African Republic to the Congo, Uganda, Burundi and Ruanda, the Camcroons, Guinea, Gabon. He worked at whatever jobs were available — as mason, cook, farmhand — until he had set aside enough money to go on to the next country. Ultimately, he covered an area as large as all of Europe. wanted to see how other people lived," he said, "and find out about their customs."

On his way, he picked up the rudiments of a number of languages. "I learned the Lingala tongue and Munu, Kautuba, Kikongo, Kisuaili, Sango, some English and Fidgi," he told Seve later. "But all this traveling was not futile greater; the description of the property of the seven who was the seven where we want to seven futile curiosity. I had read about travelers who about things in other countries. We don't have enough of that in Africa.

"We should have books recording our past history and preserving the memory of our traditional cultures. But since we have achieved independence, we have forgotten the traditions that constitute our originality. This is the thought that impelled me to start painting."

Seve, on impulse, offered to buy him the materials he needed to paint, and as soon as Biazin had the materials that he had never been able to afford, he bloomed into an entirely original artist. He began producing large and complex compositions (about 50 by 70 centimeters) that Seve rather appropriately refers to as a codex — "the only African codex."

Nearly all the works are abundantly covered with narrative inscriptions; many are signed Clement Biazin, brute epaice" (the spelling is Biazin's entirely homegrown variety). That epi-thet brute epaisse translates as "thick-skinned brute" and was Seve's term of endearment for his friend, who reciprocated by calling Seve a sale colonialiste (dirty colonialist).

Seve was so taken with Biazin's work that he illy won several awards. Then Seve's tour of duty came to an end and he returned to France, taking a job as a computer engineer. He never gave up his chief passion, filmmaking, however. Nor did he forget Biazin, though it was not always easy for him to keep Biazin. supplied with art materials.

The proceeds from my film I made over to him," he says, "which was only proper." But Seve wanted Biazin to find recognition, and that turned out to be less easy. None of the official French organizations Seve had been contacting since 1967 responded—neither the major museums, nor the ministries and embassies one might have expected to be concerned.

Seve did win some powerful moral support in France when Michel Leiris, one of the great authorities on African art, and Jean Laude, a professor of art history at the Sorbonne, registered keen interest in Biazin. Practical support materialized from the Stedelijk Museum in Amsterdam, which gave Biazin a show in 1979, and Duesseldorf's Kunsthalle, which displayed 90 paintings in January 1980.

But there was a new development. In 1974, Seve learned quite accidentally that Biazin had leprosy. "I flew down to Bangui and found he had been moved to a local leprosarium," he said. "Conditions of hygiene in the African neighborhoods are bad, but in the leprosarium they are hideous beyond description.

Seve decided that Biazin should be brought to France to be looked after and, as he had a plan for a film for which he wanted Biazin to do paintings, he asked for a work visa. It was denied. Finally, in 1977, Seve took it upon himself to bring Biazin to France on a tourist visa and had him stay on as an illegal alie and L. Aatza then the disease had made terrible inroad?

"He came to stay with me here for a of for the first of days," said Seve. "The entire building is there has like a corpse—we had to furnigate the ad french furnicase. His feet and hands had practically the string ways, and on the day after his arrival has much parts eye fell out, dropped to the floor on the speces is feet over there." then the disease had made terrible inroads

With limited exceptions, value here is a mere reflection of the quality of the stones according to the scale of values adopted by specialized dealers the world over, from New York to Hong Kong.
Automobile sales are also something of a novelty, to say nothing of engines and locomotives, of which Chris-tie's has made a specialty. Again, art hardly comes into it. Nor does it have much to do with stamps, which have become a regular auction feature. In May, 1980, Robson and Lowe, the stamp firm, was bought up by Christie's.

Much more important if less visible than the integra-tion of fringe areas has been the effort by auction houses to handle a larger percentage of the goods available for sale in the art market — inevitably at the expense of the

Here, reality cannot be translated into figures quite as accurately because there are no statistics concerning dealers' activities. Few transactions, if any, are publicized. Figures are kept secret most of the time and it would take a very naive tax collector to believe that even he has a clear picture of what is going on. However, auction room figures alone are enough to show that auction houses now play a considerable role in several sectors of the market where the monopoly of the trade was unchallenged around 1960 and in no serious danger by 1970.

This first applies to important works by great masters of the late 19th and the 20th century. An increasing number of works have been selling for large prices in the last

1978 dedicated to French furniture and works of art, has found it necessary to alter his per-spective on the U.S. market. "The market for time French furniture is still in France," he said. "I can sell any number of pairs of good 18th-century chairs in the $10,000 range. But I have an exceptional pair in the $20,000 range, for which there are no buyers." He added: "Twenty years ago, it was fash-ionable to furnish in French antique furniture.

Today, if anyone wants to demonstrate that he is a person of culture and taste in addition to being rich, he must buy modern painting." Like the market for French furniture, the English market has long been in the doldrums because of a lack of major available collections. Alistair Stair and other 57th Street dealers have long bemoaned the fact that, where they were once net exporters of their surplus fine English pieces to London, they now have become net importers at increasingly punitive terms as the pound strengthens against the

So it was no surprise that the fine collection of Marjorie Wiggin Prescott, whose father was Albert Wiggin, president of what was then the Chase National Bank, was a sensation. It established a new category of prices, not only for the major pieces of Queen Anne and George I

cabinetwork, but for what in another day would have been called modest little works for the busy fingers of gentlewomen and unknown artisans of another day.

A Charles II stumpwork toilet box brought $35,000; a James I stumpwork mirror, $32,000.

A pair of George II giltwood candelabra brought $38,000, a price that not so long ago would have raised eyebrows for silver gilt; a pair of parcel gilt wall lanterns brought

$16,000; an ivory and bone Charles II hearth brush brought $5,000; and a pair of George III cut-glass hurricane lamps, $4,800.

As for the cabinetwork, Charles Beyer, Christie's expert who cataloged the sale, said that it was the finest to come on the market in 20 years. Mrs. Prescott had made annual trips

few years. The publicity they get in the media has had a considerable effect. It has spread the impression in the public that auctions are a magical way of getting everrising prices for anything that has a big name attached to it. This, of course, is not true. There are also many failures, as happened this week in New York. But, understandably enough, the press offices of auction rooms are not anxious to advertise them.

News agencies are ill-equipped to filter critically the auction reports released by auction house spokesmen. They take for granted that they sum up the main facts, whereas they relay, by and large, the main facts that the auction house wishes to see in print. High-powered collectors are aware of the situation. Yet the optimistic image that auction houses project on the public mind has con-tributed to channeling an ever-growing number of paint-ings by Impressionist, Fauve and Cubist masters into the auction pipeline. True, works of the highest order are still sold privately generally through the trade. But immediately below the top museum level, more and more important paintings are being sold through the auction system.

A similar trend is beginning to make itself felt in the Old Master category. Some astonishing masterpieces have been sold at auction within the last 18 months. Last year, Dirk Bout's "Resurrection" sold at Sotheby's on March 29 for close to $4 million. This year, Christie's auctioned Poussin's "Holy Family" for about the same amount.

in the field of works of art, in one category at least Chinese objets d'an, including archaic bronzes and early porcelain — auction houses have come close to taking the Sotheby's, has played a considerable part by possessing that rare combination: an eye as infallible as any human can have, and consummate salesmanship. In other categories - museum-level furniture of the 18th century, mafor works of art of the Middle Ages, particularly since Sotheby's epoch-making Von Hirsch sale in June, 1978 auction houses have been launching a formidable offensive with spectacular results. This poses a major threat to the trade in the middle term.

However, it is at the bottom end of the market that the policy inaugurated by auction houses in the last decade has had the most devastating effects.

It all started when Sotheby's established a secondary bridgehead called Sotheby's Belgravia, which was intended to handle anything later than 1830 in the way of objets d'art and any paintings or sculptures that did not fall within the exalted categories of Modern Art. From Victorian Pre-Raphaelite painting to Art Nouveau, it all went to Sotheby's new auction house at 15 Motcomb Street, off

The idea, largely to be credited to Marcus Linnell of Sotheby's and entirely engineered by him during the cru-cial launching phase, has turned out to be one of Sotheby's biggest money-making schemes. Net sales for the first season, 1971-1972, totaled more than £1.5 million. In 1979-1980, they had risen to £10.4, thus quadrupling in real value within nine years. In New York, it inspired Sotheby Parke Bernet PB 82: Its operations have been more and with those of Sotheby's Fact on York America merged with those of Sotheby's East on York Avenue. The old premises on Madison Avenue now handle paintings and jewelry only. However, a fast-sale service has been introduced to quickly dispatch the lower class of

Above all, Sotheby's Belgravia's brilliant score goaded Christie's into buying Debenham's in South Kensington and turning it into Christie's South Kensington, where a system for sales of a far more modest kind has been brilliantly devised. While Sotheby's Belgravia has lavishly illustrated catalogs printed on art paper, Christie's South Kensington sends out flat catalogs with two-line entries and processes goods at three or even two weeks' notice. It applies the auctioneer's technique to junk dealer's wares and does it brilliantly. The system, instituted in 1975, has already inspired an offshoot of Christie's in New York

It also prompted Sotheby's to follow suit. Starting next month, a fast-sale service based on accelerated procedures but retaining the standard expertise and so-called guarantee system will be inaugurated in Sotheby's annex at 26 Conduit Street, around the corner from the main London premises at 34-35 New Bond Street. Sales will be held weekly.

The long-term implications of the new skills developed by auctioneers are at least as ominous for the trade as their feats in the upper end of the market. It is all the more difficult for dealers, however powerful and talented, to counter the offensive as it is launched on a worldwide

There were many record sales for Americana items during recent auctions at Sotheby's: a Goddard-Townsend chest of drawers went for $360,000, an 1830 needlework sampler went for $38,000, a Paul Revere silver coffeepot went for $64,000, a piece of American glass went for $27,000 and an 18th-century lighting device went for $23,000. Sales of American paintings also reached record levels, Sotheby's reported - $2.5 million for a Frederich E. Church, $270,000 for a Hicks, $230,000 for an Edward Hopper and $47,000 for a Grandma

"The current boom started in the 1960s, tapered off in the 1970s, then exploded again, making previous booms look like penny ante," said Albert Sack of Israel Sack Inc., which is one of the oldest dealers of Americana in the United States. HONG KONG: Fabulous Prices

THE EMERGENCE of Hong Kong as a major auction center focusing, for the time being, on Chinese art is the most unexpected development of the last decade on the international scene.

It began as recently as 1973, when an auction was organized for the first time in Hong Kong by Sotheby's, in association with Lane Crawford. In retrospect, this may appear as an inevitable sequel to the financial power of Hong Kong, which became the stronghold of the Chinese art trade following the establishment of Communist rule over mainland China.

True, some dealers - Sammy Lee, Edward T. Chow — were famous the world over by the early 1950s. Major U.S. collectors and institutions bought from them, relayed a decade later by the Japanese. True again, there was a thriving local market for snuff bottles and porcelain in the Chinese taste — that is, imperial porcelain from the 15th to the 18th centuries, with exquisite patterns and peach-like glazed

But the very idea of an auction is alien to the Far Eastern trading tradition, based on secrecy and a personal relationship between seller and buyer. Attempts made by Sotheby's in 1969 in Tokyo on the occasion of a "British week" and shortly after by Christie's, had been inconclusive. The idea of having an auction center in Hong Kong first occurred to Mamie Howe, in charge of the art and antiques business set up by Lane Crawford, sometimes referred to as Hong Kong's Harrod's. An interi-or design specialist, she was convinced that the city was ready. It had important collectors who had nowhere to go when they wanted to sell some of their possessions. Julian Thomp-son, the director of Sotheby's Chinese depart-ment, allowed himself to be convinced after a final trip in 1972.

The first experiment in November, 1973, when the market was at the height of the crest with net sales close to $2 million (all figures in U.S. dollars), was a triumph, and the second, a year later, after the oil shock, a disaster. The third year went better, and by 1976 Sotheby's decided to go ahead with two sales a season in the autumn and spring. Yet, it is only within the last eight months that the potential of Hong Kong has been fully tested with the two Edward T. Chow sales.

The first session, on Nov. 25, netted $8.2 million in three hours. A tiny cup of the late 15th century, decorated with a chicken and flower spray in polychrome enamels on white, stunned the experts as it rose to slightly more than $1 million. But this was no auction freak: Other outstanding pieces soared to unheard-of heights. A small blue and white bowl of the Xuande period (1425-1436), 10.7 centimeters high, was sold for $480,000.

It was not just prices that made the sale so significant, but the fact that the floor was virtually left to Chinese collectors. Most were Hong Kong residents, and a few came from other Southeast Asian centers.

Six months later, on May 19, a second session showed that this was not a short-lived fit of collective enthusiasm. Another 15th-century chicken cup, not as perfect as the November piece, was sold for slightly less than $800,000 to a buyer who identified himself as "Yamaka" and is believed to be a Taiwanese collector. A Xuande period dish with blue sprays on by T.Y. Chao, a shipping magnate — and a blue and white flask, also Xuande, made $610,000, paid again by T.Y. Chao, thong Kong museum was contaminated by the infectious mane of uncertained hidding. infectious wave of unrestricted bidding, and acquired a tiny Chenghua piece decorated with

He has acquired a wide range of chents, from famous foreigners (such as Yul Brynner) to members of the American Establishment (among them, Phipps and Vanderbilts). He explains why he knows that he has not steered his clients wrong: "Unfortunately, a great many of our clients divorced. When the time came for them to divide property, some of our 'babies' went on the block and they invariably sold for a lot more than our clients paid for Denning and Fourcade is well-known for being first with the opulent, highly decora-tive, tasseled and fringed, turn-of-the-centu-ry Proustian style, which it started selling years ago and which is still going strong. But when it comes to furniture in general, Mr. Fourcade said, "certainly, the trend among upper class Americans is English furniture."

Still, he said, "Americans tend to put their money on paintings rather than furniture. Their art collections are often spectacular but they don't believe in spending the same kind of money Europeans spend on furniture. Very few people, even among our rich clients, would consider spending $100,000 and up on, say, a chest of drawers. I find that, in Europe, people spend major amounts of money on furniture. COLLECTING

NEW YORK — Famous people who travel a lot tend to do their own thing and shop all over the map. Yul Brynner collects 18th-century furniture and Japanese screens; Robert de Niro loves antique bathroom fixtures; decorator Valerian Rybar likes exotica, including immense Seychelles nuts, mounted in different eras, and handcrafted silver boxes.

The wife of Kirk Douglas, with two homes in California — in Los Angeles and Palm Springs — collects from everywhere, including Israel, India, the Philippines, Egypt, Italy and France. "We just got back from Australia, where we got a couple of marvelous paintings, including a Sydney Noian," she

She likes English furniture best "because we live in California, where the lifestyle is more informal. I bought my first antique many years ago. It was a Chinese Chippen-dale from Florian Papp, on Madison Avenue. I only have two French armchairs I found in Tucson, Arizona, of all places, where my husband was making a movie.

The wife of Cornelius Vanderbilt Whitney is an avid collector but has the problem of riches. "I love antiques but I haven't had to buy for so long, What I need is to sell some. I have a mixture of French, English and Italian, which I mix with Edwardian amusing furniture. When Sonny and I got married, I had five houses and Sonny had four or five. We got rid of quite a few but we still ended up with a lot of furniture. I stored most of it in a Kentucky barn, including a couple of enormous cherubs I bought when they demolished the old New York Opera house. I don't know what I'll do with them.

"I also bought a lot in France, including an old iron staircase from a lighthouse. It sat there for 18 years until, the other day, I brought it out to use. It made the most beautiful fire escape for a four-story-high carriage house we have in Saratoga."

The fashion crowd collects, too. Calvin Klein is into early Americana; Bendel's president Geraldine Stutz likes lacquer furniture and Oriental porcelain; Sphinx-like Mary McFadden loves exotica, from Egyptian stone heads to Japanese lacquer vessels; Perry Ellis collects Chinese porcelain and old Worcester, which he buys in London.

For fashion designer Mollie Parnis, "my most precious collection is my paintings: Matisse, Picasso, two Vuilliards, Ronault, Soutine and Toulouse-Lautrec. I also have very good 18th-century furniture, which I bought years ago through decorator Billy Baldwin. I have a little salon which once belong to Pauline de Rothschild, who sold it to Baldwin before she married the baron."

Social magnets Oscar and Francoise de la Renta have been collecting Orientalist paintings for the last 10 years because we had to fill the walls and we had no money," Francoise said. Those paintings were so decorative and cost nothing at this point. Something like $200. Now they're more like

could become an important factor cio's essay "On Noble Men and in the art market during the next Women," illustrated around 1410

Within the last 18 months, there have been several indications that Paris has a remarkable potential, largely unused so far. French auctioneers have demonstrated that they can handle big sales brilliantly when they really get down to working on details and seeing it through to the end.

Last May, Jacques Tajan of the Ader-Picard-Tajan auctioneering group made an impressive score when he succeeded in getting a New York collection of rare books for sale in Paris. It included one of the finest Paris school illuminated manuscripts of the early 15th century. Cataloging was perfect, mail-ing adequate and advertising reasonably good, Mr. Tajan reaped the reward by setting a world record for a medieval manuscript. H.P. Kraus of New York paid 4.95

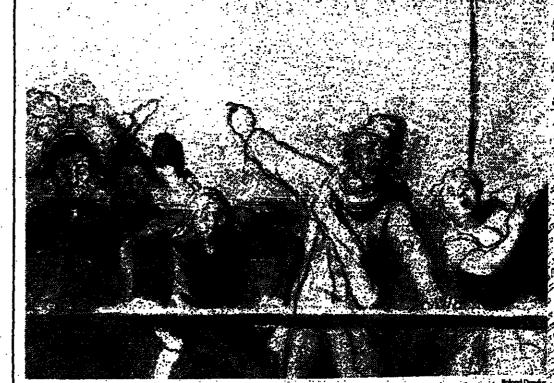

the French auction system the French translation of Boccawith 50 miniatures, two of them in large-size format. This record was only broken last Monday (IHT, May 20) when a German manuscript of far-greater importance was sold at Sotheby's for about > Another success story to be credited to the Ader-Picard-Tajan group is the series of sales of Japanese prints from the Ernest Le Veel collection. True, the group did not have to exert itself to get the collection. It was being sold by order of Andre Le Veel, the late collector's son who has been performing at Drouot as an expert on Japanese art for the last 30 years. He could not conceivably affront the auctioneers he works for or his fellow experts by sending his family's collection for sale to London.

The coffee cup is by sculptor Richard Shaw. It is a weird-looking thing that sits on a small easel and is surrounded by pasted-on newspaper clippings. The plate is by sculptor Peter Voulkos. It has a crude, giant "M" gouged in the middle of it and three holes, which probably removes any value it might have as something to eat

Braunstein calls the trend in West Coast abstract art. It is more personal and less imitative. "West Coast artists are not looking into someone else's studio to try to fig-ure out what's going to sell," she said. "They work more independently; they're not dictated to by museum directors. You get more value for the money."

San Francisco Chronicle art critic Thomas Albright agrees, saying months ago, before his big New that the "promotional apparatus York show. "Because of that one

The proprietors of the 25 or so first-run galleries in San Francisco and Los Angeles say that many better values can be found there. But ask any one of them how the prices are set, and you get an answer that is harder to grasp than a snowflake.

Why does an abstract art object increase in value? Publicity. A show by an artist in a major gal-lery can greatly enhance the value of his work. A show at the Museum of Modern Art or a favorable newspaper article can double it. When painter Tom Hollis was featured in Time magazine, Ms. Braunstein recalled, "his stock went up 10 points."

stract artists, like painter Ellsworth Kelley, are getting the best write-ups. Mr. Albright notes with a th. "There's a lot worse than Ellsworth Kelley," he said. "He's certainly not offensive. You could put his painting in any bank lobby in town and no one would mind." One of the few Kelleys on the market these days is a giant six-sided geometric shape. It is half blue, half white, and it hangs in John Berggruen's gallery, around the corner from Ms. Braunstein's. Mr. Albright says that it could have been painted by any bright 12-year-old. "I like it." Mr. Berggruen said.

"It is a painting of heroic proportions. It can draw you in or draw you out, depending on the way you look at it." Certainly nothing to argue about there. Why is it worth $90,000? "Because that's what I think I can get for it," he said. Could not John Doe take a sixshow," Ms. Braunstein said, "we of it blue and half of it white, and come up with the same thing, he was asked. "Yes, but then you'd have a Doe and not a Kelley

Mr. Berggruen, son of the Paris art gallery founder, has a fancy office with plastic penguins and a brass Hershey bar on the desk for his wealthy clients to play with.

He calls his town "sleepy old San Francisco" and admits that it has always been "kicked around as not much of an art city." But that reputation is changing with the increase in the number of buyers.

And when the Institute of Contemporary Art opens in Los Angeles in 1983, directed by the Beaubourg Museum's Pontus Hulten, the contemporary art world will take the West Coast more seriously — and more expensively.

One of the most important things that Mr. Berggruen does with new clients is to advise them not to buy art merely as an investment. Paintings are not as "liquid" as some other investments, and the owner of yesterday's masterpiece could find himself trying to unload today's blue-and-white rectangles.

prices," said Martin Stansfeld, who formerly headed Sotheby Parke Bernet's public relations and now is a consultant to the American Art Dealers Association.

What people are beginning to realize, Mr. Stansfeld said, is that one does not need to have millions in the market to show a profit over a reasonable period of time. "Almost any collection in a limited. area, bought with taste and discrimination over a 10-year period, is likely to show at least enough of a return to keep pace with inflation, which, after all, is the essential today." Hugh Hildesley, senior vice president of Sotheby Parke Bernet and for many years the head of its lectors have heeded all the warning

sionate interest in their collections, almost without regard for financial planning. Now Americans are becoming more like Europeans and are consciously putting a portion of their assets in paintings and carpets and prints."

Stories of almost accidental discoveries feed the passion for investing in the art market. A Philadelphia couple bring to Sotheby's a carpet that for 20 years has been used as a throw rug across a grand piano that was seldom played; it sells for $125,000. A youth brings a piece of silver to an auction house that was given him years ago as a tip by an elderly woman for whom ran errands; it sells for $14,000. One hopes that, in their passion for investing in the art market, col-

In the collapse of his investment business, his collection was seized by the U.S. government to cover $3 million in back taxes, and was sold in four sales at Sotheby's London. The first sale brought in enough to cover his tax debt.

Still, of the 34 exhibitors he chose for the now reputable Hayward Annual last year, only one was under 30.

Gillian Ayres and Howard Hodgkin, near-contemporaries, have followed the same direction in their individual paths, Ayres in particular emulating Hoyland in the juicy plaques of her pigment, not quite impenetrable in color but certainly so in textures, while Hodgkin has composed some teasing tableaux of abstract symbolism that never lose their link with the convention that theirs is an imagined perspective within the rectangular frame.

But if the prevalence of abstract impressionism in its diluted strength is evident in the generation looking westward, there is no lack of experiment in other trends of the non-objective. Alan Green, for example, continues in his pursuit of the final solution — the elimination of difference and the arrival at total homogeneity in his area of paint.

Born the same year as Hoyland and affected obviously by color field and minimal exemplars, he has expunged everything extraneous to his purity of purpose. Also in his 40s, John Edwards has a baroque exuberance of his own while echoing some of the gestural signs of Jasper Johns and Frank Stella.

This slightly malicious comment in the undertones of meticulous representation is detectible, too, in recent paintings by Graham Oven-don. Memories of his favorite character, Lolita, are recalled by a brooding nymphet in the role of Ophelia. David Oxtoby idolizes heroes and heroines of a different culture in moody ambiguous canvases projecting the stars of pop, rock and soul, where the sometimes sordid truth behind the tinsel does not dim the ebullient charisma. More still-life realism lives on in the weathered trompe l'ocil doors by Ben Johnson and the unassuming Irish back streets of Hector McDonnell.

While it is true that the canvas the artist paints on, according to the oriental sage Okahura Kakuzo, is the spectator's mind, it begins as the mirror image of what he sug-gested in the first place. The experience is only viable when it is shared. In the postwar generation, there has been a widespread lapse of faith in the potential of paint and canvas to express ideas visually. Performance, audio-video, land art, photography and typewritten graffiti have all been adopted, adapted, combined and exploited to explore the alternatives.

It must be said that they have failed to supplant the historic media in the venues of existing museums and galleries where they have chosen to do battle. This is not to deny the new producers their own following, although it is not always common ground with buffs of the older forms. Probably the most

In Britain, the debt to Caro is not only for his horizontal dispersal of the axis of his ready-made assemblies but for his annexation of space - any space - to colonize an exclusive context for the artifact itself.

This age-old fight of the individual image against the domination of backgrounds of architecture or adjacent sculptures was less demanding when the conflict was on purely aesthetic grounds. Now, the diversity of kinds of artifacts has muted the still quiet voice of the naturalistic idiom against the louder, brasher extravaganzas in the competitive enclosure of a museum or public piazza. One of the most striking demonstrations of art creating its own context is in view at the Hayward Gallery, where the large galleries and the high terraces give both static and animated backgrounds to a retrospective of Phillip King's sculpture. The marriage of paint-ing and sculpture in dramatic many-sided views of free-standing color planes is a new celebration of pure art that the late Barnett Newman would have approved. To take painting off the wall and recreate it as a wall itself was Newman's ambition. King, in this middle-aged renaissance of post-Pollock abstraction, makes it part of his sculpture in constantly changing perspectives.

For the near future, it is not likely that any trail will be blazed. Certainly, the drive for art to dominate its environment by shock of ideas and treatment will go on. Meanwhile, the old media in mature hands are still capable of producing fresh works of quality, if

Of his years of decorating in the United States, Mr. Fourcade said: "All in all, and despite the fact that they don't invest in furniture, the buying power and the will to spend money always amaze me. People spend a lot more here than in Europe because they are buying an atmosphere, rather than muse-

So much for the rich set. For Europeans on the lookout for a more personal adventure, the closest thing to the Flea Market would be Colombus Avenue, where the shops were open last weekend. But the flow of traffic is nowhere near that around the Flea Market or Portobello Road.

At Browser Welcome, a nest of six rather dilapidated shops at 380 Colombus Avenue, Leroy Van Horn, who runs one of them, said that there were three such complexes before Columbus Avenue became fashionable. "Now, they've lost out to fancy restaurants, such as Rouelle's, and ice cream parlors," he said. "It was a rundown neighborhood before Lincoln Center opened ten years ago." Now, it is picking up, and his clients, who come from the neighborhood, are quite affluent. "They've got a lot of money, these people from the Upper West Side," he said. "They also tend to do their own buying, rather than letting their decorators do the picking for them."

At Eclectiques, down the street, Lilit Holman said that a lot of tourists now come to the area because they've heard about it.
"They like good signed pieces, such as Lalique glass, good Art Deco," she said. Ms. Holman also had stacks of old Vuitton luggage the kind that used to cross the At-lantic in first-class cabins. Surprisingly enough, it sells well to Euro-

Down in Greenwich Village, where a lot of the shops were closed on Saturday last weekend, the most notable among the open ones was Howard Kaplan's French Country Store, 35 East 10th Street Done with a great deal of taste, it was full of the kind of sweet French provincial antiques that New Yorkers are becoming increasingly fond of.

A recent People magazine article listed among Mr. Kaplan's clients Jacqueline Onassis (who bought a broom), Woody Allen, Faye Dunaway and Johnny Carson. In a rambling barn-like setting, Mr. Kaplan displayed a great melange of goods, including a menagerie of li-fesize pottery pigs, ducks, chickens and so on, stone sinks from Burgundy, rustic tables from French convents, wicker bread baskets

The New York-born Mr. Kaplan, 37, who studied architecture in college, has been cruising France for the last 12 years. "I used to go to the Flea Market," he said, "but now it's too expensive. Normandy is what Americans think the French countryside is all pottery animals, Mr. Kaplan said, come from Normandy, where they're made from 19th-century molds. They used to be put outside houses under Napoleon III." His clients are mostly under 35, he said. "There's a whole new generation who don't want to hear about all those Louis and marquetry. They're not interested in the traditional. They want to create a mood. Right now, they like the idea that they're living on a farm. It's really just a fantasy, but I'm giving it to them."

The stiffly priced ($135 and up)

He added: "They also have as much money, if not more, than the older generations. But they are more innovative and personal. Thirty years ago, somebody with money would never had a bench like that in a Manhattan apartment. Now, it's fashionable because the younger are more daring, more secure.

DARIS - At auctions of 19thand early 20th-century photography, held twice a year in London, dealers and photography col-lectors spend about $150,000 on European photographic treasures.

Albums go for up to $54,000 each, and individual prints up to $4,500. In galleries around the world, contemporary masters sell for up to $4,000 a picture, while certain prints can fetch as much as $40,000. These prices may not be much by the standards set at other, more classical art transactions, but they are remarkable for as new an art form as photography.

Although the boom in the sales of old photographs has been dominated by American collectors in the last decade - they spent at least $75,000 at revent London auctions - more and more Europeans, particularly the British. have begun to compete in what is still an open market.

There are about 300 galleries around the world exhibiting and selling photographs. More than 50 museums with departments that specialize in photography are active buyers in the market.

The experts do not always agree on the market value of art photography. "Some of the prices, for items that nobody can be sure are

He was only interby 40 years.

The mural had been commissioned as one of those institutional works showing Capital and Labor marching arm in arm into a golden future. But Rivera included besides Lenin a portrait of Trotsky and, if memory serves, one of the first John D. Rockefeller clutching a sack bearing a huge dollar sign.

For years, ownership of a work by Rivera constituted a kind of political litmus test. Now all that has been swept away. In 1977, 40 years after the mural was literally scraped off the walls to be replaced by one more in keeping with the intent of its sponsor, the first sale devoted exclusively to Mexican painting was offered at Sotheby Parke Bernet's Madison Avenue galleries. It was a major success, but it has been dwarfed by what has since happened to the market for Mexican, and, indeed, all Latin American painting.

Last November, a painting by the Argentine Cubist Emilio Pettoruti, whose name was virtually unknown in the United States, was bought by the Acquavella Gallery of New York for $209,000, including the 10-percent buyer's premium. Pettoruti was probably betterknown in Italy, where he had worked with the Futurist Movebut they don't hesitate to pay more ment in Milan, and in Paris, where in the 1920s he had studied with Juan Gris. brought further sensational results. A North American private col-lector paid a record $200,000 for another painting by Tamayo on the watermelon theme — a favorite of the artist, as well as of his collectors - called "Boy with Melons." A Spanish private collec-tor paid $190,000 for Rivera's landscape "Paysage de Toledo," which sold in 1959 for $6,500. Out of eight more substantial works that brought prices ranging up-ward from $23,000, four went to collectors in New York and Washington, the other four to dealers and collectors in Latin America. Two nights later, Sotheby Parke Bernet entered the lists with a much larger catalog, in which a Rivera painting dated 1931, "La Canoa Enflorada," sold for $220,000 to a Mexican dealer. An appealing portrait of two children, "Delfina Flores and her Niece Modesta," also by Rivera, brought $210,000. Another watermelon

Mary-Anne Martin, who heads the painting department at Sothe-by's New York and is responsible for the growth of the Latin American market, recognizes three groups of Latin American artists: those whose work is collected internationally (Wilfredo Jam., Roberto Matta, Tamayo, Joaquin Torres-Garcia, Ferdinand Botero, among others), those whose work is widely collected in their own countries (Portinari in Brazil, Pet-toruti in Argentina, Reveron in Venezuela, Figari in Uruguay and Velasco in Mexico) and a group of younger artists with reputations at home who are seeking recognition

Among these, she identifies those influenced by Surrealism: Francisco Toledo, Alfredo Castaneda, Gunther Gerszo, Carlos Merida, Frida Kahlo (the wife of Rivera), Julio Castellanos, Leonora Carrington, Rodolfo Abularach, Gerardo Chavez and Battlle Planas: the members of the various schools of abstraction: Mario Carreno, Cundo Bermudez, Eduardo MacEntyre, Angel Vida, Antonez. A Glittering Sale in Geneva

By Calla Corner

GENEVA — Laughter erupted when the auctioneer asked a buyer if it was raining (the man had never put his hand down during the bidding). The hush came with the sound of the gavel. The final bid for a flawless 22-carat diamond: 2.3 million Swiss francs (about $1.1 million).

It was the last sale in Christie's tel Richmond in Geneva, which brought together the kinds of objects and money that the 215-old British auction house has been attracting to Switzerland for the last 12 years, since it moved its jewelry and objets d'art sales there.

"This sale has exceeded all our expectations," said Hans Nadel-hoffer of the Geneva branch as the week's tally of nearly 32 million Swiss francs (about $15 million) was made, reaffirming what Christie's has known since 1969 — with

Christie's has seen the market change drastically and clients come and go in the last 12 years, but it says that the sales have been a continuing success. The buyers at the recent sale were mostly Europeans, reflecting the instability in the Middle East and the fact that Arab money is not being concentrated in jewels, as it was a few years back. The most stale market now is in the mid-range items selling for between 20,000 and

Also coming under the hammer is the collection of Impressionist paintings of Leigh Block of Chicago, the former chairman of the board of Inland Steel. His wife died recently and left $5 million to the Chicago Art Institute, giving that museum the choice of money, paintings or a mixture of the two. The museum has elected to take some of the finest paintings from the collection, including the Degas painting of rehearsal at the Paris opera. The others are being sold at Sotheby's Madison Avenue emporium son Avenue emporium.

A number of factors have turned the flow of art toward Europe. One is the decline in years past in the value of the dollar against the currencies of most Europe-an countries; this, however, has more recently turned around.

Additionally, works of art had accumulated in the United States over a century, and their very existence had been forgotten by Europeans. What the market has to offer in Europe has become stale from overexposure. What the European dealers find in the United States is fresh,

This is particularly true for 19th-century European art, the genre paintings de-picting life in Europe in a less complex day. Since the first sales of such paintings were held by Sotheby Parke Bernet a dec-ade ago, prices have tripled and quadrupled, and in many cases have gone out of sight. The soft, sentimental paintings of life on the Paris boulevards by artists like Berard have risen to the $100,000 range. European collectors and dealers have contributed substantially to this rise.

In the case of Old Masters, few great paintings find their way into the sales, but those that do reach the auctions have not been overexposed in the marketplace. Three years ago, as many as 90 percent of the Old Masters in a sale would be bought by Europeans. That has declined as more Americans have become interested, but foreign dealers still account for perhaps Adding to the pressure on prices is the new interest of Americans in art as an investment and the demands of U.S. dealers who find it more difficult to buy privately and must go into the auction market. An important factor, too, is the publicity with which the major auction houses operate. The auctions are theater, a fascinating speciacle as the bidding goes upward in hundred-thousand-dollar increments; as much as $20 million can be spent in a couple of hours.

What happens in New York, of course, has an enormous impact on the market in Europe, for the prices paid by dealers at the New York sales must be translated into profit in sales to collectors in Europe-

Galleries Cluster PARIS: In Various Niches

By Michael Gibson

DARIS - Paris art galleries I don't appear just anywhere in the city according to space available. There are a certain number of ecological niches where the chances of survival are better, depending on the sort of clientele the galleries are looking for.

When Beaubourg was inaugurated in 1977, a number of the more avant-garde galleries had already moved into the neighborhood and settled in odd corners -- secondor third-floor apartments (which means first or second floor in the French way of counting) or the innermost courtyards of seedy build-

Many of these buildings have since had a face lift, but Daniel Templon's gallery (30 rue Beau-bourg) is still at the end of a long and winding passage that calls to mind a very large sewer. Today, about 30 galleries are gathered around the multicolored pipes of the 20th-century art refinery that is Beaubourg — most of them on the minimal and conceptual fringe, or devoted to works by young artists who aspire to the honor of representing the avant-garde.

Mr. Tempion's gallery belongs to this category, and so do those of Baudouin Lebon, Yvon Lambert, Ghislain Mollet-Vievelle, Chantal Crousel, Farideh Cadot, Gillespie, Salomon and Laage, Jean Fournier, Annemarie de Kruiiff and Ninon Robelin, whose gallery is called Bama. I may be forgetting some, but an exhaustive list would be tedious.

The Beaubourg neighborhood is not solely the fief of this type of gallery, however. You also find Alain Blondel, who shows figura-tive art of the 1920s and contemporary trompe l'oeil and Realist artists; the Galerie Beaubourg, whose mainstay is French art of the postwar years (as well as contemporary artists); Ceres Franco's L'Oeil-de-Boeuf, which deals in contemporary Expressionists, and Jean Fournier, who has long represented Sam Francis in France.

A number of these galleries were on the Left Bank about five or six years ago, but moved across the Seine because they anticipated the influx of visitors that Beaubourg has drawn. The Beaubourg area's main suit is frequently indiscrimi nate modernity, and the galleries appeal is that of an intelligent contemporary sensibility.

The Left Bank galleries are mostly clustered around the axis of the rue de Seine, and tend to present works in such predictable media as oil. gouache, pastel, marble or bronze that are nonetheless contemporary. Some, like Albert Loeb's gallery, which he inherited from his father, Pierre, have been there since before the war. Others have opened since the late 1940s. and there has been a regular turnover in the last 30 years.

The Left Bank offers a number of advantages to the gallery and the visitors: charming streets, easy walking for the visitor, and thus mutual reinforcement for the galleries. Also, being close to the Sorbonne and the Beaux-Arts, it lends an aura of artistic and intellectual daring to the gallenes.

The rue de Seine neighborhood presents a variety of styles and tastes, with Claude Bernard (who recently displayed the works of Andrew Wyeth) on the rue des Beaux-Arts, Darthea Speyer (American Expressionists) on the rue Jacques Callor, Jeanne Bucher (Vieira de Silva, for instance) on the rue de Seine, Le Dessin (con-temporary drawing) on the rue Guenegaud, Galerie Mazarine on the (engravings) rue Mazarine, Karl Flinker (Jean Helion, Gilles Aillaud and so on) on the rue de Tournon, Le Point Cardinal (Henri Michaux, Cardenas, Louis Pons and others) on the rue Jacob.

But the Left Bank galleries are not all to be found in that immediate vicinity. Some important ones are located as far afield as the rue du Bac (Daniel Gervis, Adrien Maeght), or boulevard Saint Germain (Denise Rene, who specializes in geometrical abstraction).

As for the Right Bank, it also offers variety but of a different sort. On the one hand, you have the boulevard Haussmann-avenue de Messine axis, with gallenes such as Ariel (Cobra and European Abstract Expressionism), Mathias fels (French New Realists) and the prestigious Maeght gullery ("Maeght makes raeght." a humorist recently quipped), which officially represents such artists as Miro and Chagall, as well as a varied sampling of younger artists.

Then there is the Faubourg Saint Honore, with the Galerie de France (Hartung, Music, Dotremont, Gonzalez), and Herve Ocermatt (Velikovic, Kuper, Weisbuch)

Finally, there is the avenue Maugnon Axis, which includes one or two fossils (Berheim-Jeune, which was once Van Gogh's dealer but has no significant existence as a gallery anymore), several Japanese galleries, the Garnier gallery (which represents Bernard Buffet). and Arteurial and Walry Findlay. The two firms may even be argued to have developed a world strategy. Hong Kong has become an exclusive Sotheby's stronghold. Christie's experimented in Osaka, Japan, with only mitigated success. Sotheby's, always one step ahead, also has bridgeheads in Toronto

Within a decade, the auctiongoing public has thus been multiplied on a worldwide scale. Between them, Sotheby's and Christie's must hold about two-thirds of the art auction business. Seen in this perspective, the Hong Kong auction boom na between the two world wars is may indeed be the most significant for the first time being slowly reevent in the art market since the end of World War.IL -SOUREN MELIKIAN

First, there is the presence of a very large buying force in the lower and middle range of the market that has no equivalent in London. English sales are overwhelmingly attended by professionals. Unimportant works of art will often sell a lot better in Paris.

ny, in some areas of the market, Paris possesses the competence of professional experts who yield to none. Marcel Lecomte and Denise Rousseau on prints, Pierre, Beres on rare books, Jean-Pierre Camard and Felix Marcilhac on Art Nouveau and Art Deco leave their foreign colleagues far behind.

In more specific areas of competence within a general field, Jean Nicolier, Georges Lefevre and Mi-

Fails to Ease Franc's Fall

By Paul Lewis New York Times Service

PARIS - The crisis of confidence in the French franc worsened Friday on President François Mitterrand's first full day in office, with money still pouring out of the country despite the tough defenses the new president mounted late Thursday night within hours of his

In a futher bid to halt the flight of capital abroad, the Bank of France said Friday morning it will raise its key discount rate on Monday to an all-time record 22 per-cent from 18 percent, the second rise since President Mitterrand's electoral victory.

But after rallying briefly Friday morning in thin trading, the franc ran into heavy selling pressure that pushed it down to 5.5925 to the dollar and to 2.4093 to the Deutsche mark, its lowest permitted level under the European monetary system.

Meanwhile, in a further sign of panic, the price of gold and foreign stocks, neither of which may now be imported into France or taken out, went to a premium over their value on other markets.

Bankers now estimate the Bank of France has spent about $7 bil-lion — or roughly one quarter of the $27 billion worth of foreign currency reserves it piled up under President Valery Giscard d'Estaing — trying to beat off speculative attacks on the franc since Mr. Mitterrand's election. After losing about $3.5 billion worth of reserves last week, the central bank is believed to have spent some $500 million a day defending the franc last Monday and Tuesday, $700 million on Wednedsay and about $1.2 billion Thursday. Dealers reported heavy intervention

But the Bank of France still has a vast stockpile of gold bullion that it can pledge as collatoral for foreign loans and extensive credit rights with the International Monetary Fund in Washington and with the other central banks that belong to the EMS.

Knowledgeable banking sources reported Friday that France's new Socialist rulers were badly split late Thursday night when they met in secret to confront their first major policy decision. A faction lead by Jacques Delors, economics min-ister in Mitterrand's government, argued either for an immediate devaluation against the Deutsche mark and the other member currencies of the EMS or for the franc to be taken out of the system and allowed to float freely on the market.

Mitterrand and his new prime minister, Pierre Manroy, who said either course would humiliate the Socialist Party and damage its prospects in next month's crucial legislative elections.

French residents have been banned from adding to their total portfolio of foreign stocks with the result that foreign stocks held in search and development leading up to its 580 series, had taken an expensive risk. However, because IBM has introduced new generations of large-scale computers in France jumped to a premium of five and six-year intervals, and bearound 13 percent over their value abroad on the Paris stock ex-change Friday. Companies must repatriate foreign earnings more quickly and will find it harder to cause the large-scale products have been preceded by small- and medi-um-scale products like the 4300 series, he said IBM "has a tendency to telegraph what it is coming up with at the top of the line." Oil Surpluses to Shrink By '82 End, Study Says

AP-Dow Jones

NEW YORK - Oil may no longer be in oversupply late next year. Townsend-Greenspan & Co., an economics consulting firm, said in an appraisal of world oil supply-and-demand trends.

And the report cautioned, "Modest pressures on supply could develop during 1982 at currently projected production levels even without any threat of major supply disruptions."

Despite the currently very high inventory levels, apparent excess supply in the world market could well be absorbed by the second half of 1982," said Helen Junz, who prepared the forecast. By that time, she added, world inventories of crude oil are projected to shrink to the levels prevailing in the first half of 1979. Current world-wide use of oil suggest that inventories of 5.3 billion barrels constitute about 88 days of supply. This compares with an average 74 days supply in 1978 and first half 1979.

However, only part of the world's stocks are actually available for nonemergency drawdowns, Ms. Junz said, since on the average about 4 billion barrels represent operating supplies and another half-billion barrels are in governmental strategic stockpiles.

"Accordingly, of the current estimated 5.3 billion barrels of inventories, only 750 million barrels, or 12 days of consumption are available for commercial drawdown," she said. By the end of 1982, she said, this excess should drop to 5½ days of supply. The Townsend-Greenspan forecast assumes a gradual increase in output from Iran and Iraq as well as a rise in production by countries outside OPEC. It also assumes that by the end of 1981 Saudi Arabia will have reduced its output to 8.7 million barrels a day from about 10.3 million currently.

"The demand-and-supply balances we are projecting are consistent with some price increases, about in line with world infla-tion" during 1982, Ms. Junz said. Her projections are for oil use by Western countries to edge upward each quarter from an estimated 47 million barrels a day currently to 49.3 million by the fourth quarter of 1982.

She said oil use by industrialized countries should bottom out at 36 million barrels a day this quarter, move up to about 37.5 million barrels a day by mid-1982 and stabilize through to the end of Continuing evidence of an eco-nomic slowdown came Thursday as the Commerce Department reported that new factory orders for durable goods fell by 0.4 percent last month, after seasonal adjustment. New orders for non-defense capital goods dropped 5 percent in the month, to $22.6 billion after a March rise of 15.5 percent, the report said. In corporate news, H.A. Poling, Ford Motor Co. vice president Friday described as highly premature and speculative a published report quoting a Toyota official as indicating that Toyota is having second thoughts about a proposed irring venture with Ford joint venture with Ford.

Mobil Oil Canada Friday reported gas flow rates of 13.7 million, 18.6 million and 15.3 million cubic feet in new tests of three senarate zones in the Venture B-13 appraisal well near Sable Island, off Nova Scotia.

General Electric Friday increased its quarterly dividend from 75 to 80 cents, payable July 25 to holders of record on June 10.

The report said the unadjusted consumer price index rose to 266. in April, which means that good and services that cost $10 in 196 would have cost $26.68 last month The Labor Department also said real spendable earnings - after taxes and after adjusting for infla tion — dropped 0.1 percent in April for an average married wage earner with three dependents. Real spendable earnings wer down 2.5 percent from April. 1980 while the CPI was 10 percent high er for that 12-month period.

U.K. Ford Strike Typifies Reaction to Thatcher Plan

By Steven Ratmer

New York Times Service LIVERPOOL, England — Even the participants might not have recognized it as such, but a classic example of one key aspect of Margaret Thatcher's controversial economic policies was on display this week at the strike-bound Ford Mo-tor Co. plant on the outskirts of this worn industrial city.

In one sense, the striking workers outside the factory entrance and the silent machinery inside constituted another statistic in

Her conservative economic phi-losophy has pressed companies like Ford to insist on more efficiency, and workers like these to acquiesce. Mrs. Thatcher's critics see broader results of her policies, particularly her tight control of the money supply: A near-depression that has left 2.5 million Britons unemployed and left British companies virtually without profits.

For their part, the workers' re-sponses reflect the distrust of man-

have centered on matters like how

As has been typical in Britain, money has been less in dispute at

Halewood. Last October, the union accepted a 9.7 percent wage increase, far less than inflation and less than previous raises. The average wage is now about $5 an hour, far below U.S. levels.

Beyond money, the pressures on both Ford and the workers are clear. For the company, the declining British market has contributed to a decline in pretax earnings at current exchange rates to $580 million last year (all of it earned in the first six months) from $820 million

Meanwhile, Mrs. Thatcher has stood fast against demands for quotas on Japanese auto imports at a time when markets are becoming more international. The Japanese imports, now more than 11 percent of the British market, have prompted Ford to begin to fight back, and the Halewood dispute is a consequence: For example, by 1985, the company plans to reduce its work force in Britain by 29,000, or 40 persent

Before the strike, more than 9,000 workers were required at the Halewood plant here to produce 950 cars a day, 100 less than planted. A sixter plant in Saar planned. A sister plant in Saar-louis, West Germany, makes 1,050 cars a day using only 6,000 work-ers, Ford said.

The pressure for prompt release of economic figures is so great, according to Ms. Kallek, that the government is compelled to issue some reports when it has only sketchy information. Economic data comes from a variety of sources, but most is based on Census Bureau surveys of companies.

The companies surveyed have their own problems compiling the information requested, and inevi-tably there are delays. By the time the "preliminary" GNP report was issued last month, for instance, the government had complete survey data only for languary plus partial data only for January, plus partial information about February. As a result, officials had to fill in their own guesses about March in coming up with the initial estimate for the entire quarter. By the time the revised report was released last week, February's data was more complete, and there was some initial information about the economy's performance in March. But survey data for March will not be complete until next.

month. At that point, the department will issue a "second revision" of the GNP figures. That is not the end of the revision process, however. Each July, the Census Bureau does a much more exhaustive survey of business establishments, which leads to further adjustments in its economic data. And every five years, the burezu conducts a complete census of all 7 million business establishments in the country. Government analysts also sug-gested that a careful look at the numbers can take some of the surprise out of revisions: This adjustments in the Commerce) partment's preliminary gu. about March inventories and tr.

Would you believe an agent named John Good? And Weinberg, trying to beat a rap, was impressed by New Jersey — hot diamonds, guns and muni-tions, forged certificates of deposit, counterfeit money, stolen paintings, coercive leasing contracts, municipal garbage deals, unregistered boats for dope running, a mayor who could not only be bought but who even peddled himself. As the videotape turned and the bugs buzzed, Weinberg was im-pressed: "This guy just offered to sell us the whole state. They're unbelievable over there. Everybody steals."

The stealing in New Jersey led to the greasing of Washington. Greene is so charmed by Weinberg's endlessly inventive scams that we forget to be outraged. There is a race track here and a casino there and a waterfront condominium and a titanium mine somewhere else. Abscam, as we follow it in the headlines, was an accident. No one imagined, in the beginning, that the white-collar criminals might actually have been elected, or that most of them would be Democrats, or that the FBI would have a very important friend at Chase Manhattan.

Greeze, on the evidence of this book, is unlikely to invite him home for din-

We stare into the eye of the basilisk and chuckle in self-defense. Weinberg is a character. So are we all, characters. This excellent book stops giving answers just when a reader starts asking questions. The easiest question is about casino gambling: Is the mob involved? A harder question is whether or not a law-enforcement agency can feel good about itself when it makes a deal with a swindler who is making a deal in which he agrees to swindle. Even harder is the question of "en-trapment." A bugged Weinberg was throwing around money that was supposedly Arab and found people who wanted to spend that money, especially in New Jersey. He was a kind of

No reader is likely to argue with Greene's contempt for the politicians who lapped up that money, or to deny that Weinberg is a kind of Hollywood parody of the scam man we love to loathe. Still, entrapment has been the history of homosexuals, of Black Panthers and of cocaine dealers. I wish Greene, who is more intelligent than anyone in his book, had addressed these issues. If the United States bends the Bill of Rights, shouldn't Americans say out loud that they are bent?

Hardest of all is this question: Would any of us - elected officials of the government, even the government of New Jersey — take the money and run? Shouldn't there be a higher standard for a public official than there is for, say, a Hollywood dip? Can't anyone say "no" anymore? Greene mere-ly invites us, with considerable grace, to feel bad without knowing quite

From Agency Dispatches
CHICAGO — Bob Kennedy
resigned Friday as general manager of the Chicago Cubs and was replaced by Herman Franks, the team's former field manager. President William Wrigley, announcing the change, cited the team's 6-27 record - the worst in baseball despite a victory Thursday. "It said Wrigley said, "downright embarrassing."

Wrigley said Franks, who managed the club in 1977 and 1978 before resigning late in the 1979 season, will be "inter-im general manager, with my pledge to support him on all of his decisions."

After Kennedy took over opcration of the Cubs in late 1976, he hired Franks as field manager. Preston Gomez succeeded Franks, but was fired last year in mid-season; Joey Amalfitano, his replacement, will remain, Franks said.

"I can't put a winner on the field this season," Kennedy said recently, "and I can't put one out there next year. No way." Kennedy traded many of the Cubs' highest-salaried players, including ace relief pitcher Bruce Sutter, before the start of

At long last, 10 days before the 1981 strike deadline, Grebey came up with a proposal clearly labeled, "Take it or leave it."

Grebey consumed more than an hour telling two federal mediators that the owners had no proposals to make, then produced a proposal prepared and typed in advance.

After proposing minor changes in the compensation plan, the letter declares: "In advancing these modifications, the clubs have beld back nothing, and the players' association is in a position to make an informed decision prior to May

The letter adds that the owners' proposal "removes both the need and/or the possibility of 11th-hour negotiations and the accompanying dramatics."

The timing and manner of submitting the proposal suggest that its purpose was to give the appearance of willingness to bargain just when the NLRB was considering the charge of refusal to bargain.

Question

But the proposal purports to eliminate "both the need and the possibility." In other words, there would be no further negotiations. gaining table and turn it over to a Does that or does that not consti-.tute refusal to bargain?

Some of the "modifications" are response to the players' suggestion that veteran players be exempted from the compensation provisions. The owners would exempt quality players with 14 years of major

That would exempt Ted Williams but not Joe Di Maggio.

In the original plan, a club sign-ing a so-called ranking player as a free agent would have to send its own 16th or 19th player to the free agent's former employer. A ranking player was defined as one who had had enough times at bat or started enough games on the mound or made enough relief appearances to be in the upper half of all players in his category.

Missing the Cutoff Man

Grebey's new proposal adds some performance statistics to these criteria. Since there is no minimum cutoff point, a player with five hits in 10 times at bat could conceivably rank high enough on batting average and onbase percentage to be included in the elite group.

Also, the term "all players" means more than 650 because those who were injured and didn't play an inning are included. That means that more than 325 would make the top half.

Among other conditions the players find objectionable in Grebey's proposal, and there are several, probably the one that stirs the greatest resentment is the provision for a secret draft in advance of the annual reentry draft.

in the Dark

Until the last moment before the reentry draft, a free agent would not know how many teams -- and which ones - were selecting him. A player remaining with his team would never know whether he was one of the 15 protected by his club or one of those whose bodies could be used as compensation.

There remains one week for brinksmanship, which has been an integral part of baseball's labor relations in the past. But if Grebey really meant it when he wrote that there would be no 11th-hour negotiations, look for the players to go out next week, and stay out until everyone is hurting.

Especially those owners with their futures at stake.

For his efforts, Goring was awarded the Conn Smythe Trophy as the playoffs' most valuable player.

"I don't think there's any question how great this team is," said Goring. There were a lot of doubts last year. People didn't look at us as champions. All year people doubted us. But we played some awesome hockey.

Last year when I came here it all went by so fast," he said. "I didn't suffer at all with this team. od. They stretched it to 41 on Bob It was a high all the time. Now I know everybody and feel like I'm a real part of it."

After an early flurry in which the North Stars stormed Islander goalie Billy Smith, Minnesota forward Rob Palmer was sent off for holding Mike Bossy. Goring made the North Stars pay for the error at 5:12 by taking a deflected pass from Bourne and skating in on 19-year-old rookie goalie Don Beaupre, beating him to the short side with a 50-foot wrist shot. At 10:03, Goring, who joined the team in a trade with Los Angeles only a month before last year's playoffs, poked a Clark Gillies

"Butch was a factor ever since he got here," said Bourne. "He makes such a difference in a lead-ership role. He took it over in the pass behind Beaupre. Just 25 seconds after Goring's first goal, Wayne Merrick beat Beaupre from short range after John Tonelli had outmuscled two North Star defensemen for the puck behind their net.

Ice-Breaker

Embattled Baseball's Last Angry Week Minnesota's Steve Christoff cut the deficit to 3-1 when he snapped a 25-footer behind Smith at 16:06. The North Stars, who finished the season in ninth place overall while the Islanders were first, kept pace with New York for much of the second period.

New York held a 16-4 shot advantage in that period yet for more than 19 minutes of the middle peried, but did not come any closer to scoring than did the North Stars. But with 39 second left, Minnesota defenseman Paul Shroyr misplayed the puck at the side of his net and Bourne took advantage, ripping a 25-foot shot past Beaupre. "That was the real turning point," said Beaupre. "Until then we still had a shot. "I stopped as much as I could, but they just kept coming."

Defenseman Mike McEwen

closed out scoring with a long slap shot with 2:54 left in the game. Islander Captain Denis Potvin, who suffered a groin injury early in the first period and played sparinely the rest of the way, was not at all bothered by the injury as he accepted the Stanley Cup from league President John Ziegler. Potvin and several teammates made the ceremonial trip around the ice with the cup raised high.

Bossy, who led the NHL with 68 goals this season, assisted on Goring's second goal. That gave Bossy playoff points this spring, a Stanley Cup record.

Trottier Injured

Bryan Trottier, the playoffs' MVP last year. assisted McEwen's goal and extended his playoff record consecutive-game scoring streak to 25, including all 18 in 1981 Potron who did not register a point in Game 5, wound up with 25 playoff points, a record for defensemen.

Trottier played the last two games of the finals with a separated right shoulder, it was disclosed Thursday night. He was hurt late and rammed his shoulder into the boards. Despite the injury, he played regular shifts in both Games 4 and 5.

The Islander record-setters this year proved too tough for Toronto. Edmonton, the New York Rangers and Minnesota. The Islanders swept the Maple Leafs in three games in the preliminaries and the Rangers in four semifinal games. Edmonton extended them to six games in the quarterfinals. Minnesota swept its opening se ries from Boston, took Buffalo in a five-game quarterfinal and won its semifinal from Calgary in six games. The North Stars opened each of those series with victories on the road.

"It was different this year," said Trottier. "We were the favorites. To repeat means we're not fat cats, that last year was no fluke. We're still hungry.

"To win it the second time is tougher and we accomplished it," said Bobby Nystrom, "It feels just as good. Last year we didn't know what to expect and this year we did. It's better the second time be-cause we did it all, win first place in the league and now the cup.

"We never made idle threats or predictions," he added. "We just went out and did the job." Said goalie Smith: "This was the kind of team you couldn't rattle. Last year we got rattled when we got behind, but this year if we were two goals down, we just said, 'So what?" --- and went out and won."

Despite the joy of winning a second consecutive cup. Smith said the highlight of the playoffs was the semifinal sweep of the hated Rangers. "That was the best because they had a lot to say," Smith

"We're the kind of guys who don't knock a hockey team. How about [Montreal Canadien Bob] Gainey? He never said a good word about us all season. I wonder what he's saying tonight." Gainey had referred to the Islanders as a "third-place" team.

'They Did What They Wanted'

The North Stars had undisguised praise for the Islanders. "An excellent hockey team," said Shmyr. "As far as I'm concerned, the better team won. They did what they wanted and stopped us from doing what we wanted.

The Islanders - their franchise only nine years old - are being favorably compared to the Montreal Canadien teams that won four straight cups from 1976 through 1979.

Their chances of establishing a dynasty are improved by the team's youth. Of the regulars, only Goring is over 30 and the average age of the club is slightly over 251 vears. All-star defenseman Potvin is 27, all-star center Trottier and the high-scoring Bossy are both 24. The only factor that could cloud the Islanders' dominating the league for years is that Potvin, Bossy, Nystrom, Anders Kallur and McEwen, among others, are

Wedding Anonymous

MASHINGTON — A group of VV some of the world's greatest minds met in the back of the "Class Reunion," a noted think tank in Washington, to form the Royal Society to Ignore the British

Royal Wedding.
The idea was inspired by the controversy a few weeks ago over whether the U.S. chief of protocol, Lee Annenberg should or should not have curtsied to Prince Charles as he got off the airplane on U.S. One of the members of the standing commit-Buchwald tee, named Wil-kie, said after his fourth martini. "I don't see how it can be done. We're talking about the heir to the throne of England. Every newspaper in the world is going to go bell-

"Anything can be done if we put our minds to it," Oliphant said. "But it's going to take fortitude to ignore the royal nuptials. We can easily keep from reading about them in the newspapers and magazines - the real problem is: Can we do the same with television?"

Nelson said. "I have a remote control on my TV. I can turn them off any time they come on the screen. "That's fine for you," said

Shields, "but what about the rest of us who have to jump out of our seats and reach for the knob every time they appear?"

"As I see it," said Tuck, "we can't control what the media will do with the story. But we have to decide how much wedding hype each one of us can take."

"I got an overdose last week when I saw an interview with the people who are making Lady Diana's dress. The wedding's two months away and I think I've reached my pain threshold already," said Healy, "My problem is that when I refuse to read about it, my wife reads it to me."

Novak, who was trying to rescue an onion from drowning in a tum-bler of vodka, said. I believe our biggest mistake would be if we vowed never to read another word about the royal wedding again. It's too hard to keep such a promise. What I suggest is that we take a page out of Alcoholics Anonymous and every morning we get up, we each pledge for the next 24 hours to ignore Prince Charles completely."

"What about television?" Shields wanted to know.

"If Prince Charles and Lady Diana appear on our screens," said Novak, "we must promise to stand up and turn our backs to the set." "I'll drink to that," said Oliphant.

Dunbarton, who follows the races. asked the committee. "Suppose Prince Charles falls off his horse again? Do we have to ignore that?" "It's a good question." said Nelson. "It really doesn't have anything to do with the wedding, does

"Yes and no," said Tuck. "Until Prince Charles announced his engagement, no one much cared if he fell off his horse or not. But now everyone is very concerned when he takes a spill, as it could affect the date of the wedding."
"Then," said Wilkie, "does that mean we can't watch Prince Charles fall off his horse any-

"I think it's best not to," said Novak. "At least until the couple returns from their honeymoon."

"July is going to be the toughest time for everybody," I said. "I don't see how we can keep our vows until then."

"Why don't we all go deer hunting?" Oliphant said. "If we go deep enough into the hills and no one brings a radio, we won't know if they got married or not." "That's a bully idea," said Tuck.
T've always wanted to go deer hunting out of season." Nelson raised his glass. "Gentlemen, to the royal couple. May they live happily ever after - as long as none of us have to read about the bloody details."

DARIS - "It was remarkable I how the child changed the moment Vaslav entered the room," Romola Nijinsky wrote. "It seemed aimost as though they had been one person split apart. She's been isolated long enough," says Robert Dornhelm who diand constantly wishing to be unit-intruding on them." She was intruding but now Romola is dead and the child, Kyra, has dreams in which her mother apologizes for her obstructiveness and jealousy. Kyra forgives be-cause she is a Christian and because without her mother she is finally free. "Now the union of my father and me is complete." she says.

Kyra Nijinsky was in Paris for the first time in 44 years and had just made her first visit to her father's tomb in Montmartre cemetery (her mother is buried there, too, but Kyra could not find her grave). In love and joy Kyra danced a few steps from the "Spectre de la Rose" on the spot where her father, Vaslav Nijinsky,

Saw Father Dance Once

Kyra was born in Vienna in 1913. She saw her father dance only once, in New York when she was three, and she saw him for the last time in 1939 (he lived until 1950). His attacks of schizophrenia began when she was six and once when she was nine she found herself locked in a room with him while he was hallucinating. He smashed her doll but, she says, "He wouldn't hurt me, he wouldn't." She called him Tatakaboy and they loved each other very much. "I want to have a child, a reincarnation of me as I am afraid I will soon die," Nijinsky had written in his journal.

It is an almost unbearable inheritance: through stubbornness, a strong artistic ego and an armor plating of eccentricity Kyra Niiinsky has survived. She is a sturdy hypertensive show-off who speaks 64 languages and has lived very modestly in San Francisco for 27 years. Now her existence has changed: she is the subject of a new film, "She Dances Alone," and she hopes this will lead to a new life as an actress:

"I am only happy when I am with people, so I would like to act. I want to get a job as an actress of people of my own age or just a little bit younger." She was wearing a red beret and coat over a blue and white sailor dress, red nail polish and Romola's ruby ring.

"All she wants is attention.

rected "She Dances Alone."

Origin of Film

The film, which opened Critics' Week at the Cannes Festival, came about when Dornhelm, a Romanian-born, Vienna-based director of television documentaries made a film with Rudolf Nureyev who had just met Kyra for the first time in San Francisco ("Young man, I will now teach you how to dance"). Nureyev found her remarkable and got goose pimples talking to her. Dornhelm began working on the film which went through many financial urgencies and artistic metamorphoses before finding its backers (Federico de Laurentiis, son of the mighty Dino, and Austrian TV) and its very original and apposite shape.

"She Dances Alone" is not a documentary but a film about making a film with Bud Cort playing the exasperated director, Kyra as herself, Max von Sydow as Nijinsky's voice and French dancer Patrick Dupond jumping as high as he can. The film's form. says Dornhelm, came about when he realized the best moments were when he was fighting with graph her ("my right profile is lousy") and awakens him in the middle of the night to recite an epic poem of her own composi-

The portrait of the director is ironic. "That's my past, I'm pretty skeptical about my past. I felt I'd used people and nature," Dornhelm said. The glib San Francisco setting added humor-ous contrast. "It's such a sinister subject. I'm hoping to put humor in tragedy. I'm very pleased that people laugh in the film." So is Kyra. "I looked at it and found myself funny like a comedian," she says.

"She's a performer. She wants to perform and she liked her performance," says Dornhelm who, exasperation past, finds her inspiring and vital: "She's pretty magical to me," he says. For all its humor the film is sad. "She has been convinced for 40 years that she is Nijinsky's reincarnation and she has paid the price for her obsession," Dornhelm says.

Romola and Kyra argued constantly about which one was a continuation of Nijinsky. Kyra had no doubt that it was she. To show her closeness to her father she danced some male roles and in an act of defiance to her mother she married (and later divorced) Diaghilev's last young protege, by whom she had a son she never sees. The son has decided to call himself Vaslav Nijinsky. When in a good mood, Dornhelm says, Kyra refers to herself as the daughter of Nijinsky and Diaghilev.

She is a formidable character: a bossy charmer with an eccentric's beady sensitivity. "I am not as crazy as you want me to be in this film," she says at one point. "I'm complicated but normal and very nice." She has her father's oblique eyes but as time goes on she says she looks more and more like her

"I made it clear that I was my father's continuation. Now I'm my mother's continuation too. She was very brilliant, very well mannered. I always compared her to the Queen of England. She always thought I was too bohemian. I go to restaurants and dance on tables, I interrupt people." She looks back with pleasure on her 15 one-man shows of paintings (she is also a writer, choreographer and dancer) mostly for the champagne that was served at the vernissages. "Not that I drink. I have a brandy once a week when I watch the Lawrence Welk

Hungarian Luck

Kyra's maternal grandmother was a great Hungarian actress. "the Sarah Bernhardt, the Helen Hayes of Budapest," she says. Dornhelm got Kyra to agree to his film by luck: he happened to telephone her the week of her mother's death and he addressed her in Hungarian, a language she spoke only with her mother. It seemed to Kyra that Romola was cleansing her bad conscience by sending her a Hungarian director.
"I tried to convince her I wasn't sent by any ghost," Dornhelm În San Francisco Kyra Nijinsky is a lay sister in a Francis order. "I am Sister Kyra of the Sacred Heart of Jesus. It is the Sacred Heart of Jesus that is my sweetheart. In other words, I don't date."

In Paris, she is raring to go, talking a mile a minute, interrupting even herself, cosy, grand. am glad there is no skin on the milk, she informs the waiter who pours her morning coffee. "The last time: I was in France there was skin on the milk." "Sometimes there still is," the waiter says.

'Knock Them Death'

Life has not been easy but finally she feels she is right on top.
"I have a friend in New York who said, 'Kyra, have a fantastic time in Cannes and knock them dead." Kyra went right out and bought a white ostrich boa. All her life she has been a daughter. "I loved my father and now she is dead I love my mother. The film is my growing up" she says. "Now it is Kyra, with her mother and father. "They all want to be very important in my family. My ex-husband and my son are coming to Cannes," she said with mighty scorn. "I am so glad," she added, "to be someone on my own."
